concerned about. These include transactions that generate large tax losses, transactions that generate significant book-tax differences, transactions that involve holding assets for brief periods of time in order to obtain tax credits, and transactions marketed on a confidential basis. We also are developing a new disclosure form, so that the IRS will be able to identify specific information needed to evaluate abusive avoidance transactions.

We recognize that these rules will capture legitimate transactions, and we are eager to work with taxpayers to ensure that these rules are appropriately tailored. Simplicity and clarity, however, will always remain our paramount goal.

While we believe that this web of rules truly will make taxpayers think twice about participating in a transaction that they believe they can hide from IRS scrutiny, Treasury will seek substantially stiffer penalties for those taxpayers who seek to hide.

Legislative Proposals

Our legislative proposals focus on enhanced penalties for those taxpayers and promoters who fail to follow the new, clearer rules for disclosure, registration, and list-keeping. We are seeking a new, and substantial, penalty for taxpayers who fail to disclose transactions we already have identified as tax avoidance transactions. A corporate taxpayer, for instance, will pay a penalty of $200,000 for failure to disclose certain transactions, regardless of whether or not the undisclosed transaction was a proper one. Further, if the taxpayer also loses on the merits, it will owe a new strict liability penalty of 25% of its claimed tax savings.

For promoters, we are recommending legislation that will enhance the existing penalty for the failure to register a transaction. A promoter who fails to register a transaction will be subject to fines equal to $200,000 or 50% of its fees, whichever is higher.

Because we want to make sure that promoters identify taxpayers who have invested in these transactions, we are seeking an escalating penalty that will go up by $10,000 for each day that a promoter fails to turn over a list of investors. We are facing too many delaying tactics, and this needs to stop.

Although Treasury's initiative focuses on expanding the disclosure, registration and list-keeping rules, with significantly enhanced penalties for those who disregard these rules, Treasury believes that other important steps must be taken to curb abusive tax practices.

Treasury believes that tax opinions need to be regulated because taxpayers rely on opinions for assurance that transactions are proper and will not be subject to penalties. We are taking steps administratively to regulate opinions and to fine and censure practitioners who violate our new rules. We believe we have authority to regulate this area, but urge Congress to confirm our power.

Our proposal also includes two substantive law changes. Our first substantive proposal would amend Section 901(k) of the Code to deal with trading in foreign tax credits. Under our proposed rule, a minimum holding period would be required for taxpayers to claim underlying tax credits associated with the property. Our second substantive proposal would add a new provision to create a tax regime to deal with a broad range of income stripping transactions. The new provision would address a variety of stripping transactions in a manner that would match taxes and economics.

Details of our administrative and legislative proposals are attached.

Conclusion

In conclusion, the Treasury Department and the IRS are committed to combating abusive tax avoidance transactions. Treasury and the IRS believe the complexity of the current tax system provides too many opportunities for abusive tax practices. The best way to eliminate these practices is to simplify the tax law and improve transparency so that questionable transactions are disclosed and subject to IRS review. The Treasury Department has set forth a number of administrative and legislative proposals that provide clear and simple rules for disclosure, registration and list maintenance. We also propose new and increased penalties for failure to comply with these rules. Treasury and the IRS are moving forward to implement the administrative actions, as a number of them can be undertaken without further action by Congress. Nevertheless, we urge Congress to move forward with Treasury's legislative proposals. If enacted, these proposals would improve the effectiveness of the disclosure, registration and list maintenance rules thereby changing the risk/reward analysis for taxpayers who would play the audit lottery to avoid paying their fair share of taxes.

Thank you again, Mr. Chairman, for giving me the opportunity to speak today. The Treasury Department looks forward to working with Senate Finance Committee in the important task of shutting down abusive tax avoidance transactions. I will gladly answer any questions the Committee may have.

tax practices that take advantage of a complex tax code to obtain tax benefits that Congress did not intend. The objectives of the measures I will describe are transparency and certainty. Transparency means that questionable transactions are disclosed for the IRS to review. Certainty means that taxpayers and promoters that sell these product have clear rules indicating the types of transactions they must disclose, register, and maintain list for, and that taxpayers and promoters know that appropriate enforcement activity will occur with respect to questionable transactions.

Certainty also means that taxpayers and promoters cannot avoid detection. The measures we present today will create a web of rules that will reinforce each other by requiring information reporting to the IRS about a questionable transaction both by the taxpayers participating in the transaction and by the promoter. These disclosure rules will allow the IRS to identify promoters from taxpayer disclosures, and other taxpayers from promoter disclosures. Taxpayers and promoters who fail to provide the required disclosure will be subject to significant penalties.

Before providing details about our new course of administrative actions and our legislative proposals, I think it would be helpful first to provide a context for our measures by describing the actions that Treasury and the IRS are currently taking to combat abusive tax avoidance transactions, and why we have concluded that more needs to be done. In the final analysis, however, we all must recognize that the complexity of our tax code is the fundamental reason why taxpayers have the opportunity to engage in abusive transactions, and only by simplifying the entire system will such opportunities be eradicated.

Current Enforcement Status

Treasury and the IRS are working together more closely than ever to combat abusive tax practices. Recent important steps have been directed at all aspects of this problem, from increased disclosure and consistent penalty application, to improved resource allocation and inter-agency coordination, to intensified enforcement efforts against the promoters of abusive tax avoidance transactions. These actions are having an effect, and Treasury and the IRS will continue pursuing steps that will enhance the Government's ability to curb abusive tax avoidance transactions.

Encouraged Additional Disclosure and Provided for Consistent Penalty Consideration

The IRS recently issued Announcement 2002-2, which provides an incentive for taxpayers to disclose questionable transactions. Under this program, which runs through April 23, 2002, the IRS will waive the accuracy-related penalty if a disclosed transaction results in an underpayment. The taxpayer, however, still will be liable for the additional tax and interest. In order to obtain the benefits of the program, the taxpayer must disclose to the IRS all relevant information about the transaction, including the identity of any promoter. Almost 150 transactions already have been disclosed, and the IRS expects many additional disclosures in the coming weeks. The IRS will be using the information that is disclosed to identify promoters and taxpayers who have not disclosed transactions. For example, one recent IRS inquiry of a promoter led to the disclosure of 17 investors – all of which should have disclosed their participation to the IRS. Only 5 of the 17, however, actually disclosed.

Along with this disclosure initiative, the IRS announced new penalty guidelines that will be used by the IRS' Large and Mid-Size Business Division. These guidelines make clear that the IRS considers penalties an important tool to encourage voluntary compliance. The new guidelines require IRS agents to consider the appropriateness of penalties with respect to certain transactions, and require an agent's decision to assert or not assert penalties to be reviewed by one of 17 Directors of Field Operations. The guidelines will ensure that penalties will be impartially, fairly, and consistently considered in all tax avoidance cases.

Evaluated Additional Transactions

Treasury and the IRS are continually evaluating additional transactions as they are brought to the government's attention. Treasury and the IRS are working to expedite the issuance of additional notices and guidance because the process so far has moved entirely too slowly to be effective. Recent actions taken by the Treasury Department to address specific tax avoidance transactions include (i) the publication of a notice warning taxpayers that the IRS will challenge transactions using a loan assumption agreement to claim an inflated basis in assets acquired from another party, (ii) the publication of a notice warning taxpayers that the IRS will challenge transactions improperly shifting basis from one party to another, (iii) the publication of a notice announcing Treasury's intention to promulgate regulations that prevent the duplication of losses by a consolidated group, and (iv) the promulgation of final regulations on hedging transactions that prevent employers from getting full tax deferral on deferred executive compensation.

Re-deployed and Coordinated Resources

Treasury and the IRS realize that Government resources must be used as efficiently and effectively as possible. Treasury has worked with the IRS to issue published guidance in areas, such as accounting method and timing issues, that have consumed significant IRS examination resources. According to the IRS's Large and Midsized Business Division, these areas previously used as much as 40% of large case enforcement resources across industry groups. Treasury and the IRS believes these resources are better used to address abusive tax avoidance transactions. The IRS also is working with the Department of Justice to ensure that the Government has a single, coordinated approach to cases in court.

Improved the Exchange of Information with Offshore Financial Centers

The Administration has made a concerted effort to establish information-sharing agreements with offshore financial centers that serve as havens for those who wish to hide income from the IRS. Agreements recently have been reached with three key offshore financial centers – the Cayman Islands, Antigua and Barbuda, and The Bahamas.

Targeted Promoters of Abusive Tax Avoidance Transactions

Promoters proliferate abusive tax avoidance transactions by developing them and marketing them to a large number of taxpayers. Because promoters are critical to the existence of abusive tax avoidance transactions, the IRS is taking vigorous actions to curb their activities with respect to both corporations and individuals.

The IRS has contacted 30 promoters of corporate tax avoidance transactions and is working with the Department of Justice to ensure that these promoters provide us with information on questionable transactions, including the identity of the taxpayers who participated in them. The IRS and the Department of Justice are ready to go to court to ensure that promoters comply with the IRS' requests for information. Once the IRS obtains from the promoters the identity of participating taxpayers, the IRS will initiate appropriate enforcement action against those taxpayers, including examinations and penalty consideration. In addition, the IRS has opened 14 penalty audits with respect to promoters of corporate tax avoidance transactions.

The IRS also is focusing on promoters of tax scams that are directed primarily at individuals and small businesses. Although often less sophisticated than corporate tax avoidance transactions, these scams are equally damaging to the fairness of our tax system. The IRS, working with the Department of Justice, already has obtained 6 injunctions against promoters of these schemes, and 12 other cases have been or soon will be filed. The IRS also is working to expose a major tax scam involving offshore accounts that allows United States residents to hide assets in a tax haven country while using a credit card to spend that money in the U.S. The IRS, again in coordination with the Department of Justice, has issued summonses to some of the major credit card networks and to vendors to identify the thousands, and potentially tens of thousands, of taxpayers who are participating in these schemes.

Treasury's Approach for Changing The Current Enforcement Regime

A key component of this enforcement regime is taxpayer disclosure. Disclosure allows the IRS to identify potentially abusive transactions early in the process, to evaluate those transactions, to provide guidance on whether those transactions are proper, and, if necessary, to change the regulations or recommend legislative changes to shut down abusive transactions. Disclosure also helps the IRS identify taxpayers who participate in abusive transactions and promoters who market abusive transaction. Absent disclosure, the IRS may not be able to identify and shut down abusive transactions until years after they have been undertaken. Effective disclosure rules also are important to deter taxpayers from engaging in abusive tax avoidance transactions. A disclosure regime that increases the probability of IRS detection will change the taxpayer's risk/reward analysis for playing the audit lottery.

For the year 2000 corporate returns, which were filed primarily in the fall 2001 filing season, only 272 transactions were disclosed by 99 corporate taxpayers. For the period between July 1997 and December 2001, only 3,652 transactions were registered. More than 3,000 of the registered transactions related to leasing or low income housing. Treasury and the IRS have been disappointed with the small number of disclosures and registrations and with promoter compliance with the list maintenance rules. Some promoters are claiming they are not required to maintain investor lists or are refusing to provide the lists to the IRS in a timely manner.

After reviewing the operation of the current rules, the Treasury Department and IRS have concluded significant changes to the rules are necessary. The Treasury Department and IRS' review identified what has proven effective and what has proven ineffective. Based on the review, the Treasury Department and IRS are proposing changes that build on what has proven effective and that avoid the ineffective.

The heart of an effective regime is certainty - certainty that problematic transactions will be identified, certainty that the rules will be enforced, and certainty that the penalties that Congress enacted to deter abusive tax avoidance transactions will be imposed in appropriate circumstances. The current rules do not provide the necessary certainty.

The rules for disclosing, registering, and maintaining customer lists for tax shelter transactions differ, which introduces a certain amount of complexity. In addition, the disclosure regulations set forth a series of filters and exceptions that taxpayers are parsing to avoid disclosure. For example, taxpayers are interpreting the filters identifying reportable transactions narrowly, and the exceptions broadly. Our new rules eliminate the exceptions, including exceptions in the current rules that allow taxpayers not to disclose if there exists a "generally accepted understanding" that the tax benefits are permitted, or if there exists "no reasonable basis" for IRS denial.

The rules as they exist today were intended to create a web that would allow the IRS to identify and halt problematic tax avoidance transactions, but the complexity of the rules and differences among the rules - essentially, holes in the web - do not afford certainty of disclosure, identification, or enforcement, or the deterrent effect that that certainty would bring.

The Treasury Department and IRS have concluded a more effective system would include a single set of rules applicable to disclosure, registration, and maintenance of customer lists that is simpler to apply. That single set of rules should apply on a clear, bright line basis that leaves no room for interpretation and is not based on subjective inquiries. Moreover, a single set of rules should create a more perfect web that increases the certainty of IRS detection of failure to register, failure to disclose, and failure to maintain customer lists, and thus deters tax shelter activities.

The Treasury Department and IRS have concluded that failure to disclose should result in specific penalties, including penalties more severe than the penalties that would apply to a disclosing taxpayer. Moreover, taxpayers that disregard IRS rules and regulations and fail to disclose should not be able to hide behind an opinion to escape penalties that would otherwise apply. Taxpayers who fail to disclose certain transactions and lose on the merits would be subject, under our proposals, to a new strict liability penalty.

Administrative Changes

Yesterday, Treasury announced an initiative to improve disclosure through a combination of administrative actions already underway and new legislative proposals. This initiative extends disclosure requirements to partnerships, S corporations, trusts, and some individuals. We expect it to greatly enhance disclosure, registration, and list-keeping by imposing clear, consistent rules. Clear rules coupled with clear consequences for noncompliance will be much more effective than vague standards coupled with uncertain consequences. Greater certainty of penalties, for example, will be more effective than higher penalties of uncertain application.

Many of our administrative actions involve making the rules governing taxpayer disclosure and promoter registration and list keeping clearer and consistent. This will do two things. First, consistent definitions and bright lines will stop taxpayers, promoters, and their advisors from interpreting and manipulating the requirements and the exceptions in the existing regulations to avoid disclosing and registering transactions. More importantly, these new rules will ensure that we have a web of rules that will allow us to move quickly from the disclosure of a transaction by a taxpayer to the promoter, and from there to the promoter's list of investors to find other taxpayers who have engaged in questionable transactions. We believe that taxpayers and promoters today are betting that they can hide from scrutiny, and we want to make that a losing bet.

I would like to point out that the complexity of our tax Code in many cases gives rise to corporate tax benefits. If a taxpayer is willing to fully disclose the details of a transaction and defend it on the merits, that is all we can ask. For those transactions that produce tax benefits under the Code but should not, early detection will allow us to quickly seek legislative changes.

We are deliberately casting a broader net than exists under the current rules. Under current rules, transactions that the IRS has identified as a tax avoidance, or listed, transactions, must be disclosed and registered, and we will keep that rule. We are replacing, however, the multi-factor 2-of-5 test and related exceptions in the current rules, with clear categories designed to capture the types of transactions we are most

THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT'S ENFORCEMENT PROPOSALS FOR ABUSIVE TAX AVOIDANCE TRANSACTIONS

The Treasury Department is announcing an initiative that will ensure that the Treasury Department and the IRS have the information and the tools to combat abusive tax avoidance transactions. A vast majority of taxpayers and their advisors do their best to comply with the law. Unfortunately, some practitioners and firms in the tax, accounting, and financial fields are encouraging taxpayers to engage in abusive tax avoidance transactions that are structured to generate tax benefits not intended by Congress. Fairness requires that the Treasury Department and the IRS identify these questionable transactions (along with the taxpayers who invest in them and the persons who promote them), evaluate the tax positions taken, and take appropriate enforcement actions.

Rules that provide for the allocation of income and losses among partners, the deduction of interest, the crediting for foreign taxes paid, the increase to tax basis in assets – all rules that have important and legitimate uses – are just some of the rules that may be used in these transactions to create unintended tax benefits. These abusive transactions harm the public fisc, erode the public's respect for the tax laws, and consume valuable IRS resources.

Transparency – insuring that questionable transactions are disclosed and subject to IRS review – is critical to the Government's ability to address abusive tax avoidance practices. The Treasury Department believes that clear rules mandating transparency and vigorous enforcement are essential to curbing abusive tax avoidance transactions. If a promoter is comfortable with selling a transaction, a taxpayer is comfortable with entering into that transaction, and a tax practitioner is comfortable with advising that the transaction is proper, then they all should be comfortable with the IRS knowing about and understanding the transaction.

The existing enforcement provisions in the Internal Revenue Code (Code) for tax avoidance transactions, along with the temporary regulations issued in February 2000, are designed to give the Treasury Department and the IRS the opportunity to evaluate questionable transactions. Section 6111 of the Code requires promoters who market transactions to register with the IRS transactions that either will generate a certain level of tax benefit or are corporate tax avoidance transactions that are marketed on a confidential basis. Section 6112 requires that promoters maintain lists of investors in registered transactions as well as other potential tax avoidance transactions. The regulations under Section 6011 require corporate taxpayers to disclose on their tax returns transactions that the IRS has identified as tax avoidance transactions or that have certain characteristics common to tax avoidance transactions.

Since the beginning of this Administration, the Treasury Department has made clear its commitment to curtailing abusive tax practices. The Treasury Department in particular wanted to evaluate the return disclosures from the 2000 corporate filing season, which ended in the fall of 2001, to determine whether the existing enforcement regime is

- Transactions that are Marketed under Conditions of Confidentiality and that Provide Minimum Tax Benefits – Any transaction that is promoted under conditions of confidentiality, if the transaction results in, or is reasonably expected to result in (i) a reduction in taxable income of any individual taxpayer of at least $250,000 in any combination of years, (ii) a reduction in taxable income of any corporate taxpayer of at least $500,000 in any combination of years, or (iii) a reduction in the tax liability of any taxpayer (or any combination of partners, shareholder, or beneficiaries in the case of a partnership, S corporation, or trust) of at least $250,000 in any combination of years.

The Treasury Department recognizes that this definition of a reportable transaction potentially will cover many transactions that may not be abusive tax avoidance transactions. This definition, however, will enable the Treasury Department and the IRS to accomplish two important objectives. First, this definition will give the Treasury Department and the IRS information needed to evaluate promptly potentially questionable transactions. Equally important, this definition will allow the Treasury Department and the IRS to identify problems and anomalies with existing rules and regulations for which statutory or regulatory changes should be considered.

4. Clarify the Definition of a Listed Transaction – Under current law, a “listed transaction” includes any transaction that is the same or “substantially similar” to a transaction identified by the IRS in published guidance as a tax avoidance transaction. The Treasury Department and the IRS will amend the regulations under Section 6011 of the Code to clarify that a listed transaction includes any similar transaction. For this purpose, a similar transaction will include any transaction that is designed to obtain the same or similar types of tax benefits and that is either factually similar or based on the same or similar tax strategy. Further, the revised regulations will provide that the term “similar” must be broadly construed in favor of disclosure. A transaction, for example, would be similar to the basis-shifting transactions described in IRS Notice 2001-45 if the transaction relies on Sections 318 and 302 to shift basis from one person to another in a factual situation similar to the one in the notice.

Reason for Proposal: Some taxpayers and promoters have applied the “substantially similar” standard in an overly narrow manner to avoid disclosure. Some taxpayers and promoters, for example, have made subtle, but insignificant, changes to a listed transaction in order to claim that their transaction is not subject to disclosure. Others have taken the position that their transaction is not substantially similar to a listed transaction because they have an opinion concluding that the transaction is proper. The Treasury Department believes that these types of interpretation are improper.

5. Impose Strict Liability for Accuracy-Related Penalties for Listed Transactions that are not Disclosed – Under current law, taxpayers may claim a defense to the accuracy-related penalty, even for an undisclosed listed transaction resulting in an underpayment, based on an opinion regarding the tax consequences of the transaction. The Treasury Department and the IRS will amend the regulations under Sections 6662 and 6664 of the Code to provide that (i) a taxpayer cannot rely on an opinion as a defense to the imposition of the accuracy-related penalty under Section 6662 if a listed transaction is not disclosed and results in an underpayment and (ii) that any underpayment resulting from a listed transaction that the taxpayer has failed to disclose will be treated as an underpayment attributable to negligence or disregard of rules or regulations for purposes of Section 6662. Taxpayers would be deemed not to have good faith and reasonable cause under Section 6664(c) of the Code for listed transactions that are not disclosed. In addition, individual taxpayers would be deemed not to have reasonable belief under Section 6662(d)(2)(C)(i)(II) for listed transactions that are not disclosed.

Reason for Proposal: The Treasury Department believes that many listed transactions are not being disclosed. Promoters are advising taxpayers to disregard the disclosure requirements on grounds that an opinion will be sufficient to avoid accuracy-related penalties even if a listed transaction is identified during audit and results in an underpayment. The Treasury Department believes there should be strict liability for accuracy-related penalties in cases where a listed transaction is not disclosed, regardless of the amount of the understatement.

6. Impose Strict Liability for Accuracy-Related Penalties for Transactions Based on the Invalidity of a Regulation that are not Disclosed – Some promoters are advising taxpayers to participate in certain tax avoidance transactions based on opinions that conclude that a contrary regulation is invalid. The Treasury Department and the IRS will amend the regulations under Sections 6662 and 6664 of the Code to provide that a taxpayer cannot rely on an opinion as a defense to the imposition of the accuracy-related penalty under Section 6662 for any underpayment attributable to the disregard of rules or regulations if the underlying transaction or item (whether or not a “tax shelter” as defined by Section 6662) was not adequately disclosed. The defenses to the penalty under Sections 6662(d)(2)(B) and 6664(c) would not be available in these cases.

Reason for Proposal: Taxpayers and promoters should not be permitted to rely on opinions – rendered for penalty protection – that conclude that one or more regulations are invalid unless the taxpayer discloses that its position is based on the invalidity of a regulation. Although the Treasury Department believes that such opinions currently are insufficient to establish a defense to the penalty, some promoters nevertheless are encouraging participation in (and nondisclosure of) transactions based on such opinions. The Treasury Department believes that this practice is improper for all transactions regardless of whether they are reportable transactions.

7. Broaden the Range of Persons who are Required to Register Reportable Transactions and Maintain Lists of Investors – The Treasury Department and the IRS will amend the regulations under Sections 6111 and 6112 of the Code to clarify that all parties materially involved with a reportable transaction, including a promoter's or a taxpayer's independent advisors, must register a transaction and maintain lists of investors or ensure that the registration and list maintenance occurs. Material participation will be measured by the fees received, or expected to be received, as a result of the transaction or a series of related transactions (e.g., fees in excess of $250,000 for corporate transactions, or in excess of $100,000 for individual transactions). In addition, a material participant may include a return preparer if the return preparer materially participated in the promotion of the transaction, or if the return preparer or an affiliated party receives fees based in part on the taxpayer's participation in the transaction.

In order to avoid unnecessary burden, the Treasury Department and the IRS would allow otherwise obligated persons to agree to have a single person register a transaction on behalf of a group of promoters and advisors so long as the registration identifies all of the promoters and advisors subject to the agreement. The IRS would not be precluded from imposing a penalty on any obligated party otherwise required to register a transaction if the transaction is not registered. A promoter or advisor would always have the option of registering a transaction on its own. Each promoter or advisor, however, would be required to maintain its own list of investors. Clarifying legislation to coordinate the language in Section 6111 and 6112 may be requested. See Legislative Proposal No. 9, below.

Reason for Proposal: The IRS is dealing with many situations where promoters have not registered transactions or maintained lists of investors. Some promoters, for example, have argued that they are merely "advisors" or "return preparers" (and not an organizer or seller) for a transaction and therefore are not subject to the registration and list-maintenance requirements. In other instances, the promoting parties use or create a separate entity that they claim promotes the transactions. Afterwards, this separate entity ceases doing business, and there is no registration or investor list. The Treasury Department believes that these practices are improper.

8. Establish Standards for Opinions in Circular 230 – Circular 230 provides standards and ethical rules for practice before the IRS. In January 2001, the Treasury Department and the IRS issued proposed amendments to Circular 230 that would establish new rules and standards for opinions that are used to support tax avoidance transactions. These amendments reflect Treasury's concern that many of these opinions were being written to promote a transaction without reaching a firm conclusion about the validity of the transaction, were inadequately discussing important legal issues, were reaching inconsistent conclusions on issues, or were assuming questionable factual assertions by taxpayers. The Treasury Department believes that practitioners have a duty to the integrity of the tax system as well to their clients, and in the case of opinions used to promote or support tax avoidance transactions, a higher degree of diligence and analysis is appropriate.

The Treasury Department and the IRS are evaluating these proposed amendments in light of the extensive comments received from the major tax professional organizations and will issue revised proposed amendments shortly. In addition, the Treasury Department and the IRS will finalize other proposed amendments to Circular 230 that were issued in January 2001.

Reason for Proposal: Tax avoidance transactions require opinions by tax professionals that the transactions are legitimate and proper. Many taxpayers will not participate in these transactions without opinions, either as a basis for participating in a transaction or as protection from penalties. Some tax professionals are rendering opinions that fall short of the minimum standards that the Treasury Department believes are appropriate. This proposal would address this problem by establishing minimum standards for these types of opinions.

9. Provide a Consistent Form for Return Disclosures – The IRS will issue a disclosure form, to be submitted by taxpayers as part of their returns and to the IRS' Office of Tax Shelter Analysis, that will clearly identify the information required to be disclosed for reportable transactions. These forms will require taxpayers to disclose information relevant to the IRS' evaluation of a transaction (e.g., the participation of a tax-indifferent entity in a transaction giving rise to a tax loss claimed by the taxpayer).

Reason for Proposal: Although existing rules require that certain information be included as part of a disclosure, the Treasury Department believes that a standard form will ensure that all relevant information is provided to the IRS.

10. Establish Procedures for Early Examinations of Potential Tax Avoidance Transactions – The IRS will establish procedures for the early examination of potential tax avoidance transactions while allowing for the examination of other issues at a later time. This process will allow the IRS to quickly identify, evaluate, and shut down abusive tax avoidance transactions.

Reason for Proposal: Although existing rules under Section 7605 of the Code permit the early examination of a particular issue, the Treasury Department believes that these procedures should be clarified to emphasize the availability of an early examination of potential tax avoidance transactions. This action will ensure that the IRS will be able to act quickly on disclosures and registrations of reportable transactions, while allowing for the examination of other issues as part of the regular audit process.

11. Target Abusive Tax Avoidance Schemes – The IRS will re-deploy resources to identify and shut down abusive tax avoidance schemes. For example, the IRS' Small Business/Self Employed Division (SBSE) is finalizing the establishment of a centralized organization charged with developing leads on these schemes. As part of this effort, SBSE will establish a dedicated network of at least one examination group/collection group team in each of the 16 SBSE areas to work on abusive tax scheme cases; establish a new executive position to focus solely on abusive tax schemes, money laundering and fraud; implement additional monitoring of the Internet and other media outlets where abusive tax schemes often are advertised; increase efforts to educate the public about why these schemes are illegal; and increase efforts to shut down promoters.

Reason for Proposal: Many abusive tax avoidance schemes that are targeted at individuals and small businesses are marketed through a number of different mass media outlets. The Treasury Department believes that increased monitoring of these media outlets, as well as increased publicity about the dangers of these schemes, will help curb these tax avoidance schemes.

TREASURY'S LEGISLATIVE PROPOSALS

1. Impose a Penalty for the Failure to Disclose Reportable Transactions – The Treasury Department will seek legislation that would:
 - Impose a penalty on corporate taxpayers for each failure to disclose a listed transaction equal to the sum of (i) $200,000 and (ii) 5% of any underpayment resulting from the listed transaction.
 - Impose a penalty of $50,000 on corporate taxpayers for each failure to disclose a reportable transaction (other than listed transactions).
 - Impose a penalty of $200,000 on partnerships, S corporations, and trusts for each failure to disclose a listed transaction, and $50,000 for each failure to disclose other reportable transactions.
 - Impose a penalty on individual taxpayers for each failure to disclose a listed transaction equal to the sum of (i) $100,000 and (ii) 5% of any underpayment resulting from the listed transaction.

The portion of this proposed penalty that is dependent on the amount of any underpayment will be incorporated as an enhancement to the existing accuracy-related penalty under Section 6662.

The IRS would be given the discretion to waive all or a portion of the penalty imposed if the taxpayer can demonstrate that (i) the failure to disclose a reportable transaction was due to reasonable cause and (ii) the taxpayer's income from the transaction was properly reported. The IRS would not have the discretion to waive the penalty for listed transactions.

Reason for Proposal: Although the failure to disclose a transaction is a factor in determining whether an accuracy-related penalty should be imposed, current law does not impose a penalty for the mere failure to disclose a reportable transaction on a return. The Treasury Department believes that nondisclosure should be subject to a separate sanction because it undermines the IRS' ability to evaluate questionable transactions.

2. Require Public Disclosure by Corporate Taxpayers of Penalties for the Failure to Disclose Listed Transactions and Accuracy-Related Penalties Resulting from an Undisclosed Listed Transactions – The Treasury Department will seek legislation requiring corporate taxpayers to disclose, in their filings with the Securities and Exchange Commission, any penalty for the failure to disclose a listed transaction and any accuracy-related penalty resulting from an undisclosed listed transaction.

Reason for Proposal: The Treasury Department believes that a corporation should be required to disclose to its shareholders the corporation's participation in a listed transactions if the corporation incurs any penalties as a result of not disclosing the transaction to the IRS.

3. Amend the Penalty for the Failure to Register a Reportable Transaction – The Treasury Department will seek legislation that would amend Section 6707 of the Code, which provides for the penalty on promoters for the failure to register a transaction under Section 6111. The amendment would:
- Impose, for listed transactions, a penalty equal to the greater of 50% of the fees paid to the promoter or $200,000. This penalty would be increased to 75% for the intentional failure to register a transaction or the intentional failure to provide complete or true information as part of a registration. For transactions that are marketed before a transaction is identified by the IRS as a listed transaction, this penalty would apply only if the transaction is not registered within 90 days after the transaction becomes a listed transaction.
 - Impose, for the failure to register all other reportable transactions, a penalty of $50,000.

Reason for Proposal: The Treasury Department believes that a significant penalty should be imposed on the failure to register a reportable transaction.

4. Increase the Penalty for the Failure to Timely Turn Over Investor Lists – The Treasury Department will seek legislation that would replace the existing penalty in Section 6708 of the Code for a promoter’s failure to maintain lists of investors in a reportable transaction. Under the Treasury Department’s proposal, the penalty would be changed so that if a promoter fails to provide the IRS with a list of investors within 20 business days after receipt of the IRS’ written request, the promoter would be subject to a penalty of $10,000 for each additional business day that the requested information is not provided. This penalty would be imposed for each investor list that a promoter fails to maintain or delays in providing to the IRS. The IRS would have the discretion to extend the deadline or waive all or a portion of the penalty for good cause shown.

Reason for Proposal: Too many promoters are using delaying tactics to avoid turning over investor lists. The Treasury Department believes that the penalty statute must be structured to sanction this type of behavior.

5. Permit Injunction Actions against Promoters who Repeatedly Disregard the Registration and List-Maintenance Requirements – The Treasury Department will seek legislation to amend Section 7408 of the Code to allow the Government to enjoin promoters after the repeated disregard of the rules requiring the registration of reportable transactions under Section 6111 of the Code and the maintenance of investor lists under Section 6112 of the Code. An injunction would place a promoter under court order to abide by the registration and list-maintenance requirements. The promoter then would be in contempt of court if it violates these rules in the future.

Reason for Proposal: One of the persistent problems faced by the Treasury Department and the IRS is the fact that some promoters are ignoring the rules even in the face of penalties. The Treasury Department believes that the threat of an injunction will enable the Treasury Department and the IRS to curb the most egregious behavior by promoters.

6. Impose a Penalty for the Failure to Report an Interest in a Foreign Financial Account – The Treasury Department will seek legislation that will impose, in addition to existing criminal penalties, a civil penalty of $5,000 for the failure to comply with the rules and regulations requiring the reporting of information requested on the “Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts” (Form TD F 90-22.1). The IRS would have the ability to waive the penalty, in whole or in part, if the taxpayer paid all U.S. tax due with respect to the taxpayer’s foreign accounts and the taxpayer demonstrates that the failure to file this form was due to reasonable cause.

Reason for Proposal: The Treasury Department believes that many taxpayers are not filing Forms TD F 90-22.1 even though they have an obligation to do so. Because many tax avoidance transactions involve foreign financial accounts, information about a taxpayer's interest in a foreign financial account will enhance the IRS' ability to identify participants in tax avoidance transactions.

7. Increase the Penalty for Frivolous Return Positions – The Treasury Department, in its 2003 fiscal year budget, has proposed to increase the penalty for frivolous tax returns from $500 to $5,000. This amendment would further deter individual taxpayers from taking positions that have no basis in law or fact, such as claims that the Federal income tax is unconstitutional and claims for slavery reparations. The IRS would publish, at least annually, a listing of positions, arguments, requests, and proposals deemed frivolous for purposes of the statute.

Reason for Proposal: The IRS has been faced with a significant number of individuals who are filing returns based on frivolous arguments or who are seeking to hinder tax administration by filing returns that are patently incorrect. The IRS must address such frivolous arguments through statutorily mandated procedures, which result in delay and additional administrative burden and expense. The Treasury Department believes that enhanced penalties would deter egregious taxpayer behavior and enable the IRS to utilize its resources more efficiently.

8. Permit a Single Definition of a Reportable Transaction for Disclosure, Registration, and List-Maintenance Requirements – The Treasury Department will seek legislation amending the statutory definition of a transaction that must be registered under Section 6111 of the Code (currently, a “tax shelter” as defined in Section 6111(c) and (d)) using the existing definition under section 6112(b)(2) – i.e., “any entity, investment plan or arrangement or other plan or arrangement which of a type which the Secretary determines by regulations as having a potential for tax avoidance or evasion.” Among other things, this would eliminate the “conditions of confidentiality” requirement in Section 6111(d). In addition, the registration requirements under Section 6111 would be expanded to cover transactions entered into by individuals, partnerships, S corporations, and trusts.

Reason for Proposal: This proposal will allow for regulations that will establish a single definition of a “reportable transaction” for purposes of disclosure, registration and list maintenance. See Administrative Action No. 3, above.

9. Confirm the Treasury Department and the IRS' Ability to Expand the Number of Persons Required to Register Reportable Transactions and Maintain Investor Lists – The Treasury Department will seek legislation confirming that the registration requirements under Section 6111 of the Code apply to all organizers and sellers of a reportable transaction, including persons who assist such persons, and confirming the Treasury Department and the IRS' authority to impose conditions on agreements among promoting parties to have only one person (on behalf of a group of promoters) register a reportable transaction and maintain lists of investors. See Administrative Action No. 7, above.

10. Confirm the IRS' Ability to Regulate Tax Avoidance Transaction Opinions – The Treasury Department will seek legislation that would confirm the Treasury Department and the IRS' power to mandate and enforce standards for opinions used to support tax avoidance transactions. The Treasury Department and the IRS currently are revising proposed amendments to Circular 230 that would regulate these types of opinions. See Administrative Action No. 8, above. This legislative proposal would confirm that providers of opinions could be subject to censure and/or disbarment from practice before the IRS for violation of Circular 230, and would authorize the imposition of fines.

Reason for Proposal: Although the Treasury Department believes that the regulation of opinions used to promote a tax avoidance transaction or avoid penalties is authorized by existing statutes, some tax practitioners have questioned this authority. The Treasury Department believes that confirming legislation is desirable to make clear that the Treasury Department and the IRS has the authority to regulate these types of opinions.

11. Expand Section 901(k) – The Treasury Department will seek legislation that will amend Section 901(k) of the Code to cover income streams other than dividends (which already are covered by the statute) that are subject to foreign withholding taxes. Other income streams that may be subject to foreign withholding taxes include interest and royalties. The amendment would require a minimum holding period for the underlying property generating the income and deny foreign tax credits with respect to any withheld foreign taxes if the minimum holding periods are not satisfied.

Reason for Proposal: The Treasury Department is concerned that the recent appellate decisions in Compaq and IES may cause taxpayers to renew their efforts to trade in foreign tax credits to reduce their U.S. tax liability. While Section 901(k) of the Code already addresses the specific type of transaction at issue in these cases, this section should be expanded to cover other similar transactions.

12. Curb Abusive Income-Separation Transactions – The Treasury Department will seek legislation to curb abusive “income-separation” transactions that are structured to create immediate tax losses or to convert current ordinary income into deferred capital gain. These transactions are similar to the bond-stripping transactions that were prohibited by Section 1286 of the Code almost two decades ago and preferred stock-stripping transactions that were prohibited by Section 305(e) nearly a decade ago.

Reason for Proposal: Subsequent to the enactment of Section 1286, which applies only to bonds, and Section 305(e), which applies only to preferred stock, taxpayers have been engaging in essentially identical transactions using similar assets – i.e., assets providing for relatively stable, periodic income and with substantial future value. The Treasury Department believes that these transactions are abusive. Although the IRS is pursuing these transactions under existing tax principles, legislation is needed to create a more comprehensive, consistent tax regime.

In a common form of these types of transactions, a taxpayer acquires shares in a money-market mutual fund, which provide for a periodic income stream and which have a constant redemption value (e.g., $1 per share). The taxpayer separates the right to receive the income stream over a specific period (e.g., 15 years) from the right to the underlying shares at the end of that period. When the future right to the shares is sold, the parties claim that under the technical rules (i) the taxpayer has a large tax loss on the sale of the future right to the shares (this is accomplished through the allocation of the entire tax basis solely to the future right to the shares), and (ii) the buyer, rather than recognizing ordinary income periodically as the future right to the shares increases in value over time, claims that it is entitled to defer income until a future sale, at which time the buyer will claim that its income is capital gain. Other types of assets used in these income-stripping transactions include leases and service contracts.

The Treasury Department will propose legislation that will treat an income-separation transaction as a secured borrowing, not a separation of ownership. Debt characterization will ensure that the parties' ongoing accounting treatment from the transaction clearly reflects income.

working and, if not, what additional measures are required. This review is complete, and the apparent willingness of taxpayers to parse words to narrow requirements and expand exceptions has been disappointing. Significant changes must be made to discourage these practices.

The Treasury Department's proposals, which include both administrative actions and legislative changes, will significantly enhance the current enforcement regime and will curtail the use of abusive tax avoidance transactions to obtain unintended tax benefits. These proposals focus on increased transparency, because transparency is central to the Treasury Department and the IRS' ability to evaluate promptly new tax avoidance transactions and to move quickly to close them down.

The Treasury Department believes that an effective enforcement regime must create a web of rules that will reinforce each other by requiring information about a questionable transaction to be provided to the IRS both by the taxpayers participating in these transactions and by the promoters and their advisors. Promoters and advisors will be required to maintain lists of investors and will be subject to significantly increased penalties if they fail to do so. These rules will allow the IRS to identify promoters who failed to register based on taxpayer disclosures, and other taxpayers who failed to disclose based on promoter investor lists.

One of the primary goals of these proposals is certainty. Clearer disclosure rules, without exceptions and perceived loopholes, will be easier for taxpayers and their advisors to apply, harder for taxpayers and their advisors to manipulate, and easier for the IRS to administer and enforce. The Treasury Department's proposals, for example, will broaden and align the rules and regulations for disclosure, registration, and list keeping under Sections 6011, 6111, and 6112 of the Code. The IRS will have multiple sources of information about questionable transactions, including the identity of the participants. Taxpayers and promoters no longer will be able to avoid IRS scrutiny.

The Treasury Department also proposes enhanced penalties for the failure to disclose and maintain the information required by the IRS to enforce the tax laws. The Treasury Department, for instance, will seek legislation creating strict liability for a new penalty for a taxpayer's failure to disclose a listed transaction. This penalty for the first time would sanction taxpayers for failure to follow the disclosure rules. More generally, taxpayers and promoters who disregard the rules for disclosure, registration and list-keeping will run the risk of being sanctioned.

2001 Taxpayer Return Disclosures

The corporate returns that were filed during the fall 2001 filing season were the first to be fully covered by the revised disclosure regulations under Section 6011 of the Code. To date, 99 corporate taxpayers have disclosed 272 transactions.

- Only 64 listed transactions were disclosed. Listed transactions are transactions that previously have been identified by the IRS in published guidance as tax avoidance transactions. The Treasury Department and the IRS have reason to believe that a far greater number of listed transactions were undertaken.

- The remaining 208 disclosures were for transactions that satisfy a multi-factor test designed to identify transactions that have at least two of five characteristics common to tax avoidance transactions (the 2-of-5 filter test). Two types of transactions, however, account for 159 of these disclosures. The Treasury Department and the IRS believe that taxpayers and promoters are manipulating the requirements and exceptions to the 2-of-5 filter test to avoid disclosure.

The small amount of disclosure was disappointing. From the information the Treasury Department has seen, this disclosure also is a small segment of the universe of transactions that should have been disclosed. The Treasury Department has concluded that a number of factors have led to insufficient disclosure, registration, and list-keeping.

First, the rules in Sections 6011, 6111, and 6112 of the Code do not contain a consistent definition of a transaction that must be disclosed and registered, and for which investor lists must be maintained. While this situation is due, in part, to differing statutory requirements, it also reflects the desire, when these rules were drafted, to exclude legitimate business transactions and minimize taxpayer administrative burden. The result, unfortunately, is a set of elegantly constructed, but complicated, rules. The Treasury Department's proposals would create a single, clear definition of a transaction that must be disclosed and registered, and for which lists must be maintained.

Second, the rules and regulations under Section 6011, 6111, and 6112 contain a number of exceptions intended to ensure that the rules are narrowly tailored. For instance, the disclosure requirements contain an exception for transactions in the ordinary course of business in a form consistent with customary commercial practice. Another disclosure exception is for transactions that the IRS has "no reasonable basis" to challenge.

The Treasury Department believes that many taxpayers and promoters have read the exceptions broadly to cover virtually everything and interpreted the requirements narrowly to cover virtually nothing. While some of these positions are being taken in good faith, others are attempts to encourage taxpayers to engage in tax avoidance transactions without scrutiny. The Treasury Department's proposals would eliminate these exceptions.

Third, the penalties for the failure to comply with the existing enforcement regime may be insufficient to deter efforts to avoid IRS scrutiny. For example, there currently is no penalty for the failure to disclose a transaction subject to the disclosure requirements, although nondisclosure may be a factor in determining if an accuracy-related penalty applies to any underpayment. The Treasury Department's proposals would create a new, and significant, penalty for the failure to disclose transactions, and would significantly increase the penalty imposed on promoters who delay in providing investor lists to the IRS.

Finally, many taxpayers and promoters believe that they can disregard the rules and avoid detection. As described below, the IRS already is taking steps to increase detection, and these proposals will enhance the IRS' ongoing efforts.

Ongoing Efforts to Combat Abusive Tax Avoidance Transactions and Their Promoters

The Treasury Department and the IRS recently have taken a number of important, additional steps to combat abusive tax practices. The Treasury Department and the IRS are committed to making sure that the necessary time, effort, and resources are committed to this important issue.

- Encouraged Voluntary Disclosure – IRS Announcement 2002-2, which was issued last December, gives taxpayers an incentive to disclose questionable transactions and other items that may have resulted in an underpayment. Under the Announcement, if a taxpayer discloses a questionable transaction before April 23, 2002, the IRS will waive the accuracy-related penalty if additional tax ultimately is due. In order to obtain this relief, a taxpayer must disclose all relevant information about the transaction, including the identity of any promoter. The IRS already has received almost 150 disclosures and expects many additional disclosures in the coming weeks. The IRS will use the information it receives to pursue promoters, identify taxpayers that have not disclosed reportable transactions, and evaluate the new types of transactions that are identified.
- Issued Penalty Guidelines – Along with the disclosure initiative, the IRS issued penalty guidelines for tax avoidance transactions, including guidelines for the coordination of penalty consideration with the IRS' Office of Tax Shelter Analysis. These guidelines will ensure that penalties are impartially, fairly, and consistently considered in all tax avoidance transaction cases.
- Evaluated Additional Transactions for Identification as Listed Transactions – The IRS recently issued Notice 2002-21, which identifies the so-called Custom Adjustable Rate Debt (CARD) transaction as a listed transaction, and a number of other transactions currently are under review. The Treasury Department and the IRS, however, recognize the critical need to expedite the process for reviewing questionable transactions and are working to meet this objective.
- Made Additional Resources Available to Address Abusive Tax Avoidance Transactions – Recent published guidance in areas that have consumed significant IRS audit resources, such as accounting method and timing issues, will allow the IRS to devote more of its audit resources to tax avoidance transactions.

- Developed a Mandatory IDR for LMSB Cases – The IRS’ Large and Midsize Business Division (LMSB) has developed an information document request (IDR) that will be used for all LMSB audits beginning in April 2002. This mandatory IDR will request information regarding the taxpayer’s listed transactions.
- Increased Coordination with the Department of Justice – In order to coordinate the Government’s efforts against abusive tax avoidance practices and conserve resources, The Treasury Department and the IRS have increased their coordination with the Department of Justice on tax avoidance transaction cases.
- Entered into Tax Information Exchange Agreements (TIEAs) - The Treasury Department has mounted a concerted effort to enter into agreements covering the exchange of tax information with significant foreign financial centers where the possibility of hiding income or assets poses a serious problem. Agreements recently have been reached with three key offshore financial centers – the Cayman Islands, Antigua and Barbuda, and The Bahamas.

The IRS is vigorously pursuing actions against the promoters of corporate and individual tax avoidance transactions. The IRS’ objectives are to curb the most egregious promoters, penalize non-compliance, and obtain investor lists that will allow the IRS to target and examine those taxpayers who have engaged in potential tax avoidance transactions.

The IRS has contacted some 30 promoters of corporate tax avoidance transactions in connection with their marketing activities.

- “Soft Letters” – The IRS has requested, through so-called “soft letters,” information from these promoters. These letters request investor lists as well as information regarding compliance with the registration requirements under Section 6111. A number of promoters already have provided the IRS with a significant amount of information, including investor lists.
- Summonses – The IRS, in cooperation with the Department of Justice, is using summonses to force promoters to provide investor lists and other materials related to their promotion of tax avoidance transactions. These summonses already are proving to be a valuable tool, and additional summonses are being prepared. The IRS and the Department of Justice will seek to enforce all summonses in court, if necessary.
- Penalty Audits – The IRS has begun more than a dozen promoter penalty audits and expects to begin additional audits in the coming weeks.

The IRS also has intensified its enforcement efforts against promoters of abusive tax avoidance transactions and scams directed primarily at individuals and small businesses. These schemes include claims that the federal income tax is unconstitutional, claims that individuals are citizens of the States and therefore not subject to federal income tax, claims that U.S. citizens are not subject to U.S. income tax because of Section 861 of the Code (so-called “Zero Tax” schemes), and credit claims for slavery reparations. The Treasury Department believes that these schemes are especially pernicious because the individuals targeted often have a poor understanding of their legal duties and obligations. Recent and ongoing actions include:

- Injunctions Granted – The Department of Justice has obtained injunctions against six promoters of abusive tax avoidance schemes, including a preliminary injunction that was issued on February 20, 2002.
- Pending Cases – The Department of Justice has filed an additional eight actions against promoters of abusive tax avoidance schemes.
- Future Cases – The IRS has referred a number of additional promoter cases to the Department of Justice in order to initiate legal action against these promoters.

In addition, the IRS is pursuing a major initiative against promoters of abusive offshore trust schemes. These schemes use banks located in offshore tax havens to help U.S. individuals hide income while at the same time allowing these individuals to access their offshore money in the U.S. by using credit cards issued by the offshore banks. The IRS believes that thousands, and potentially tens of thousands, of individuals are using these schemes to evade tax. In addition to an extensive publicity campaign to educate the public about the dangers of these schemes, the IRS is working to shut them down.

- Summonses to Credit Card Networks – Summonses have been issued to two credit card networks to obtain transaction information that will allow the IRS to identify individuals who are using credit cards issued by foreign banks to evade tax.
- Summonses to Vendors – Although information obtained from the credit card networks may identify the names of some individuals, these schemes are set up so that the credit card networks often do not have information identifying specific persons. Summonses will be issued to vendors that maintain identification information for credit card transactions. The IRS expects to identify thousands of individuals through these vendor summonses.
- IRS Audits - The IRS will initiate audits of individuals who are identified as potential participants in these schemes. If an identified individual is already under audit, this information will be provided to the auditor.
- Criminal Prosecution – The IRS and the Department of Justice will initiate, where appropriate, criminal proceedings against individuals who have violated the criminal laws by participating in these schemes.

These Treasury Department and IRS actions at both the corporate and individual level are having an effect. Aggressive enforcement and continuous taxpayer education will continue to be keys to the Government's efforts to close down the tax schemes being marketed to individuals and small businesses. For the more sophisticated tax avoidance transactions, increased transparency, supported by stiffer penalties, are needed.

The Treasury Department's enforcement proposals are divided into administrative actions and legislative proposals. These proposals, collectively, will enhance and expand the efforts to combat abusive tax avoidance transactions.

TREASURY'S ADMINISTRATIVE ACTIONS

1. Require Individuals, Partnerships, S Corporations, and Trusts to Disclose Reportable Transactions – The Treasury Department and the IRS will amend the regulations under Section 6011 of the Code to require individual taxpayers, partnerships, S corporations, and trusts to disclose “reportable transactions,” as described in Administrative Action No. 3, below. This requirement, however, will not affect individuals unless they engage in specifically identified tax avoidance transactions or other transactions resulting, for example, in claimed losses of $2 million or more.

Reason for Proposal: Under current law, only corporate taxpayers are required to disclose reportable transactions on a tax return. The Treasury Department believes that potentially abusive tax avoidance transactions are increasingly being used by high net-worth individuals. Individuals, for example, have used transactions modeled after those described in Notice 2000-44 (the so-called “Son of Boss” transaction) and Notice 2001-45 (basis-shifting transaction) to avoid paying income tax. In addition, potentially abusive transactions by both corporations and individuals often employ partnerships and trusts. The Treasury Department believes that individuals, partnerships, S corporations, and trusts should be required to disclose questionable transactions even if the same transaction would be required to be disclosed multiple times.

2. Centralize the Receipt and Review of Disclosures by Individuals, Partnerships, S Corporations, and Trusts – Disclosures of transactions must be submitted as part of a taxpayer's return. The Treasury Department and the IRS currently require that copies of disclosures also be sent to a single location so that the IRS' Office of Tax Shelter Analysis can coordinate their review. This centralized filing requirement for disclosures will be expanded to disclosures required for individuals, partnerships, S corporations, and trusts and will permit the expeditious review of all disclosures.

Reason for Proposal: The Treasury Department believes that the review of all disclosures, whether by individuals, partnerships, S corporations, trusts, or corporations, must be centralized and coordinated. The coordinated review of these disclosures will allow The Treasury Department and the IRS to identify trends and new types of transactions and will ensure the consistent evaluation of disclosed transactions.

3. Establish a Consistent Definition of a “Reportable Transaction” for Return Disclosure, Registration and List-Maintenance Purposes – The Treasury Department and the IRS will amend the regulations under Sections 6011, 6111, and 6112 of the Code to establish a single definition of the types of transactions (reportable transactions) that must be disclosed by taxpayers and registered by promoters, and for which lists of investors must be maintained by promoters.¹

The current regulations under Section 6011 require taxpayers to disclose (i) listed transactions (i.e., tax avoidance transactions identified by the IRS in published guidance), subject to a minimum tax effect requirement; and (ii) transactions that satisfy the 2-of-5 filter test, subject to a number of exceptions. Under new regulations, the 2-of-5 filter test would be replaced by clearer rules that will be easier for taxpayers and their advisors to apply and the IRS to administer. In addition, the tax effect requirement for listed transactions and the exceptions to the 2-of-5 filter test, including the exception for transactions in the ordinary course of business in a form consistent with customary commercial practice, would be eliminated.

Under this proposal, this same definition of a reportable transaction will be used to identify those transactions that must be registered by promoters under Section 6111 and for which lists must be maintained pursuant to Section 6112 of the Code.

The Treasury Department recognizes that clearer rules will have the effect of broadening the list of transactions that will need to be reported to the IRS. The IRS therefore will have the ability to issue published guidance to identify those transactions that would not be treated as reportable transactions. In addition, the IRS will establish expedited procedures whereby taxpayers (and particularly those taxpayers who enter into multiple transactions of the same type) can seek a determination from the IRS that their transactions are not reportable transactions.

Reason for Proposal: Taxpayers and promoters are reading the exceptions in the current rules liberally and interpreting the requirements narrowly. The Treasury Department believes that a clear and consistent rule for disclosure, registration, and list-maintenance will ensure that the IRS has multiple sources of information about a reportable transaction. If a taxpayer fails to disclose a reportable transaction, the IRS must have the ability to move quickly from a registration to an investor list in order to identify that taxpayer and other non-disclosing taxpayers. Similarly, the IRS must be able to move quickly from a taxpayer disclosure of a reportable transaction to a promoter that did not register the transaction, and from there to other taxpayers that did not disclose the transaction. This web of disclosure will increase the likelihood that taxpayers who fail to disclose and promoters who fail to register will be identified.

A reportable transaction would be defined as a transaction (which will be defined to include any series of related transactions) falling into one or more of the following categories:

- Listed Transactions – Any transaction specifically identified by the IRS in published guidance as a tax avoidance transaction. The projected tax effect limitation in the existing regulations would be eliminated. The IRS' identification of listed transactions under existing regulations has played an important role in compelling disclosure of existing transactions, discouraging future participation in these transactions, and guiding IRS examination of these transactions in the field.
- Loss Transactions – Any portion of any transaction resulting in, or that is reasonably expected to result in, a tax loss under Section 165 of the Code of at least $10 million (for corporate taxpayers) or $2 million (for individual taxpayers) in any single taxable year, or of at least $20 million (for corporate taxpayers) or $4 million (for individual taxpayers) in any combination of taxable years.

Loss transactions also will include any portion of any partnership or S corporation transaction resulting in, or that is reasonably expected to result in, a tax loss under Section 165 of at least $10 million in any combination of years.

Loss transactions further will include any portion of any trust transaction resulting in, or that is reasonably expected to result in, a tax loss under Section 165 of at least $2 million in any single year or $4 million in any combination of years, whether or not any losses flow through to one or more beneficiaries.

- Transactions with Brief Asset Holding Periods – Any transaction resulting in a tax credit (including a foreign tax credit) if the underlying asset giving rise to the credit was held by the taxpayer for less than 45 days. This definition would be limited to transactions resulting in tax credits exceeding $500,000.
- Significant Book-Tax Differences – Any book-tax difference of at least $10 million, subject to specific exceptions for book-tax differences that are not indicative of potentially abusive tax avoidance practices. The Treasury Department expects that these exceptions will include, among others, book-tax differences resulting from depreciation, depletion, amortization, bad-debt reserves, state and local taxes, and employee compensation.

SENATE FINANCE COMMITTEE
Testimony Statement of Mark Weinberger
Assistant Secretary of the Treasury for Tax Policy

March 21, 2002

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Member and other members of the Committee, thank you for inviting the Treasury Department to testify today on the important issue of abusive tax avoidance transactions. We appreciate the role that your Committee has taken in considering these matters. Through your statements and the release of staff draft legislative proposals, you have take the lead in the public discussion about how to best address tax avoidance transactions.

The problem is that taxpayers are taking advantage of complexities in the law to obtain tax benefits not intended by Congress. Abusive tax avoidance transactions pose a threat to the integrity of our self-assessment tax system by eroding the public's respect for the tax law. They also waste public and private resources and harm the public fisc.

As you know, the Treasury Department has been evaluating the effect of the current enforcement regime, particularly the effect of the disclosure regulations issued in February 2000, before initiating a new course of administrative actions and making legislative proposals. We appreciate very much, Mr. Chairman, that the Committee has given us the time to complete our evaluation because we believe that what we have learned will result in more effective rules. Treasury's testimony today will highlight the measures necessary to address abusive tax avoidance transactions. Our proposals include administrative actions we already are beginning to undertake, as well as legislative proposals. Our administrative and legislative initiatives are similar in many respects to the proposals considered by your staff in the draft legislation they previously produced.

The goal we all share is to ensure that each taxpayer pays its fair share of tax. We do not wish to interfere with legitimate business tax planning, but we must curb abusive concerned about. These include transactions that generate large tax losses, transactions that generate significant book-tax differences, transactions that involve holding assets for brief periods of time in order to obtain tax credits, and transactions marketed on a confidential basis. We also are developing a new disclosure form, so that the IRS will be able to identify specific information needed to evaluate abusive avoidance transactions.

We recognize that these rules will capture legitimate transactions, and we are eager to work with taxpayers to ensure that these rules are appropriately tailored. Simplicity and clarity, however, will always remain our paramount goal.

While we believe that this web of rules truly will make taxpayers think twice about participating in a transaction that they believe they can hide from IRS scrutiny, Treasury will seek substantially stiffer penalties for those taxpayers who seek to hide.

Legislative Proposals

Our legislative proposals focus on enhanced penalties for those taxpayers and promoters who fail to follow the new, clearer rules for disclosure, registration, and list-keeping. We are seeking a new, and substantial, penalty for taxpayers who fail to disclose transactions we already have identified as tax avoidance transactions. A corporate taxpayer, for instance, will pay a penalty of $200,000 for failure to disclose certain transactions, regardless of whether or not the undisclosed transaction was a proper one. Further, if the taxpayer also loses on the merits, it will owe a new strict liability penalty of 25% of its claimed tax savings.

For promoters, we are recommending legislation that will enhance the existing penalty for the failure to register a transaction. A promoter who fails to register a transaction will be subject to fines equal to $200,000 or 50% of its fees, whichever is higher.

Because we want to make sure that promoters identify taxpayers who have invested in these transactions, we are seeking an escalating penalty that will go up by $10,000 for each day that a promoter fails to turn over a list of investors. We are facing too many delaying tactics, and this needs to stop.

Although Treasury's initiative focuses on expanding the disclosure, registration and list-keeping rules, with significantly enhanced penalties for those who disregard these rules, Treasury believes that other important steps must be taken to curb abusive tax practices.

Treasury believes that tax opinions need to be regulated because taxpayers rely on opinions for assurance that transactions are proper and will not be subject to penalties. We are taking steps administratively to regulate opinions and to fine and censure practitioners who violate our new rules. We believe we have authority to regulate this area, but urge Congress to confirm our power.

Our proposal also includes two substantive law changes. Our first substantive proposal would amend Section 901(k) of the Code to deal with trading in foreign tax credits. Under our proposed rule, a minimum holding period would be required for taxpayers to claim underlying tax credits associated with the property. Our second substantive proposal would add a new provision to create a tax regime to deal with a broad range of income stripping transactions. The new provision would address a variety of stripping transactions in a manner that would match taxes and economics.

Details of our administrative and legislative proposals are attached.

Conclusion

In conclusion, the Treasury Department and the IRS are committed to combating

abusive tax avoidance transactions. Treasury and the IRS believe the complexity of the current tax system provides too many opportunities for abusive tax practices. The best way to eliminate these practices is to simplify the tax law and improve transparency so that questionable transactions are disclosed and subject to IRS review. The Treasury Department has set forth a number of administrative and legislative proposals that provide clear and simple rules for disclosure, registration and list maintenance. We also propose new and increased penalties for failure to comply with these rules. Treasury and the IRS are moving forward to implement the administrative actions, as a number of them can be undertaken without further action by Congress. Nevertheless, we urge Congress to move forward with Treasury's legislative proposals. If enacted, these proposals would improve the effectiveness of the disclosure, registration and list maintenance rules thereby changing the risk/reward analysis for taxpayers who would play the audit lottery to avoid paying their fair share of taxes.

Thank you again, Mr. Chairman, for giving me the opportunity to speak today. The Treasury Department looks forward to working with Senate Finance Committee in the important task of shutting down abusive tax avoidance transactions. I will gladly answer any questions the Committee may have.

tax practices that take advantage of a complex tax code to obtain tax benefits that Congress did not intend. The objectives of the measures I will describe are transparency and certainty. Transparency means that questionable transactions are disclosed for the IRS to review. Certainty means that taxpayers and promoters that sell these product have clear rules indicating the types of transactions they must disclose, register, and maintain list for, and that taxpayers and promoters know that appropriate enforcement activity will occur with respect to questionable transactions.

Certainty also means that taxpayers and promoters cannot avoid detection. The measures we present today will create a web of rules that will reinforce each other by requiring information reporting to the IRS about a questionable transaction both by the taxpayers participating in the transaction and by the promoter. These disclosure rules will allow the IRS to identify promoters from taxpayer disclosures, and other taxpayers from promoter disclosures. Taxpayers and promoters who fail to provide the required disclosure will be subject to significant penalties.

Before providing details about our new course of administrative actions and our legislative proposals, I think it would be helpful first to provide a context for our measures by describing the actions that Treasury and the IRS are currently taking to combat abusive tax avoidance transactions, and why we have concluded that more needs to be done. In the final analysis, however, we all must recognize that the complexity of our tax code is the fundamental reason why taxpayers have the opportunity to engage in abusive transactions, and only by simplifying the entire system will such opportunities be eradicated.

Current Enforcement Status

Treasury and the IRS are working together more closely than ever to combat abusive tax practices. Recent important steps have been directed at all aspects of this problem, from increased disclosure and consistent penalty application, to improved resource allocation and inter-agency coordination, to intensified enforcement efforts against the promoters of abusive tax avoidance transactions. These actions are having an effect, and Treasury and the IRS will continue pursuing steps that will enhance the Government's ability to curb abusive tax avoidance transactions.

Encouraged Additional Disclosure and Provided for Consistent Penalty Consideration

The IRS recently issued Announcement 2002-2, which provides an incentive for taxpayers to disclose questionable transactions. Under this program, which runs through April 23, 2002, the IRS will waive the accuracy-related penalty if a disclosed transaction results in an underpayment. The taxpayer, however, still will be liable for the additional tax and interest. In order to obtain the benefits of the program, the taxpayer must disclose to the IRS all relevant information about the transaction, including the identity of any promoter. Almost 150 transactions already have been disclosed, and the IRS expects many additional disclosures in the coming weeks. The IRS will be using the information that is disclosed to identify promoters and taxpayers who have not disclosed transactions. For example, one recent IRS inquiry of a promoter led to the disclosure of 17 investors – all of which should have disclosed their participation to the IRS. Only 5 of the 17, however, actually disclosed.

Along with this disclosure initiative, the IRS announced new penalty guidelines that will be used by the IRS' Large and Mid-Size Business Division. These guidelines make clear that the IRS considers penalties an important tool to encourage voluntary compliance. The new guidelines require IRS agents to consider the appropriateness of penalties with respect to certain transactions, and require an agent's decision to assert or not assert penalties to be reviewed by one of 17 Directors of Field Operations. The guidelines will ensure that penalties will be impartially, fairly, and consistently considered in all tax avoidance cases.

Evaluated Additional Transactions

Treasury and the IRS are continually evaluating additional transactions as they are brought to the government's attention. Treasury and the IRS are working to expedite the issuance of additional notices and guidance because the process so far has moved entirely too slowly to be effective. Recent actions taken by the Treasury Department to address specific tax avoidance transactions include (i) the publication of a notice warning taxpayers that the IRS will challenge transactions using a loan assumption agreement to claim an inflated basis in assets acquired from another party, (ii) the publication of a notice warning taxpayers that the IRS will challenge transactions improperly shifting basis from one party to another, (iii) the publication of a notice announcing Treasury's intention to promulgate regulations that prevent the duplication of losses by a consolidated group, and (iv) the promulgation of final regulations on hedging transactions that prevent employers from getting full tax deferral on deferred executive compensation.

Re-deployed and Coordinated Resources

Treasury and the IRS realize that Government resources must be used as efficiently and effectively as possible. Treasury has worked with the IRS to issue published guidance in areas, such as accounting method and timing issues, that have consumed significant IRS examination resources. According to the IRS's Large and Midsized Business Division, these areas previously used as much as 40% of large case enforcement resources across industry groups. Treasury and the IRS believes these resources are better used to address abusive tax avoidance transactions. The IRS also is working with the Department of Justice to ensure that the Government has a single, coordinated approach to cases in court.

Improved the Exchange of Information with Offshore Financial Centers

The Administration has made a concerted effort to establish information-sharing agreements with offshore financial centers that serve as havens for those who wish to hide income from the IRS. Agreements recently have been reached with three key offshore financial centers – the Cayman Islands, Antigua and Barbuda, and The Bahamas.

Promoters proliferate abusive tax avoidance transactions by developing them and marketing them to a large number of taxpayers. Because promoters are critical to the existence of abusive tax avoidance transactions, the IRS is taking vigorous actions to curb their activities with respect to both corporations and individuals.

The IRS has contacted 30 promoters of corporate tax avoidance transactions and is working with the Department of Justice to ensure that these promoters provide us with information on questionable transactions, including the identity of the taxpayers who participated in them. The IRS and the Department of Justice are ready to go to court to ensure that promoters comply with the IRS' requests for information. Once the IRS obtains from the promoters the identity of participating taxpayers, the IRS will initiate appropriate enforcement action against those taxpayers, including examinations and penalty consideration. In addition, the IRS has opened 14 penalty audits with respect to promoters of corporate tax avoidance transactions.

The IRS also is focusing on promoters of tax scams that are directed primarily at

individuals and small businesses. Although often less sophisticated than corporate tax avoidance transactions, these scams are equally damaging to the fairness of our tax system. The IRS, working with the Department of Justice, already has obtained 6 injunctions against promoters of these schemes, and 12 other cases have been or soon will be filed. The IRS also is working to expose a major tax scam involving offshore accounts that allows United States residents to hide assets in a tax haven country while using a credit card to spend that money in the U.S. The IRS, again in coordination with the Department of Justice, has issued summonses to some of the major credit card networks and to vendors to identify the thousands, and potentially tens of thousands, of taxpayers who are participating in these schemes.

Treasury's Approach for Changing The Current Enforcement Regime

A key component of this enforcement regime is taxpayer disclosure. Disclosure allows the IRS to identify potentially abusive transactions early in the process, to evaluate those transactions, to provide guidance on whether those transactions are proper, and, if necessary, to change the regulations or recommend legislative changes to shut down abusive transactions. Disclosure also helps the IRS identify taxpayers who participate in abusive transactions and promoters who market abusive transaction. Absent disclosure, the IRS may not be able to identify and shut down abusive transactions until years after they have been undertaken. Effective disclosure rules also are important to deter taxpayers from engaging in abusive tax avoidance transactions. A disclosure regime that increases the probability of IRS detection will change the taxpayer's risk/reward analysis for playing the audit lottery.

For the year 2000 corporate returns, which were filed primarily in the fall 2001 filing season, only 272 transactions were disclosed by 99 corporate taxpayers. For the period between July 1997 and December 2001, only 3,652 transactions were registered. More than 3,000 of the registered transactions related to leasing or low income housing. Treasury and the IRS have been disappointed with the small number of disclosures and registrations and with promoter compliance with the list maintenance rules. Some promoters are claiming they are not required to maintain investor lists or are refusing to provide the lists to the IRS in a timely manner.

After reviewing the operation of the current rules, the Treasury Department and IRS have concluded significant changes to the rules are necessary. The Treasury Department and IRS' review identified what has proven effective and what has proven ineffective. Based on the review, the Treasury Department and IRS are proposing changes that build on what has proven effective and that avoid the ineffective.

The heart of an effective regime is certainty - certainty that problematic transactions will be identified, certainty that the rules will be enforced, and certainty that the penalties that Congress enacted to deter abusive tax avoidance transactions will be imposed in appropriate circumstances. The current rules do not provide the necessary certainty.

The rules for disclosing, registering, and maintaining customer lists for tax shelter transactions differ, which introduces a certain amount of complexity. In addition, the disclosure regulations set forth a series of filters and exceptions that taxpayers are parsing to avoid disclosure. For example, taxpayers are interpreting the filters identifying reportable transactions narrowly, and the exceptions broadly. Our new rules eliminate the exceptions, including exceptions in the current rules that allow taxpayers not to disclose if there exists a "generally accepted understanding" that the tax benefits are permitted, or if there exists "no reasonable basis" for IRS denial.

The rules as they exist today were intended to create a web that would allow the IRS to identify and halt problematic tax avoidance transactions, but the complexity of the rules and differences among the rules - essentially, holes in the web - do not afford certainty of disclosure, identification, or enforcement, or the deterrent effect that that certainty would bring.

The Treasury Department and IRS have concluded a more effective system would include a single set of rules applicable to disclosure, registration, and maintenance of customer lists that is simpler to apply. That single set of rules should apply on a clear, bright line basis that leaves no room for interpretation and is not based on subjective inquiries. Moreover, a single set of rules should create a more perfect web that increases the certainty of IRS detection of failure to register, failure to disclose, and failure to maintain customer lists, and thus deters tax shelter activities.

The Treasury Department and IRS have concluded that failure to disclose should result in specific penalties, including penalties more severe than the penalties that would apply to a disclosing taxpayer. Moreover, taxpayers that disregard IRS rules and regulations and fail to disclose should not be able to hide behind an opinion to escape penalties that would otherwise apply. Taxpayers who fail to disclose certain transactions and lose on the merits would be subject, under our proposals, to a new strict liability penalty.

Administrative Changes

Yesterday, Treasury announced an initiative to improve disclosure through a combination of administrative actions already underway and new legislative proposals. This initiative extends disclosure requirements to partnerships, S corporations, trusts, and some individuals. We expect it to greatly enhance disclosure, registration, and list-keeping by imposing clear, consistent rules. Clear rules coupled with clear consequences for noncompliance will be much more effective than vague standards coupled with uncertain consequences. Greater certainty of penalties, for example, will be more effective than higher penalties of uncertain application.

Many of our administrative actions involve making the rules governing taxpayer disclosure and promoter registration and list keeping clearer and consistent. This will do two things. First, consistent definitions and bright lines will stop taxpayers, promoters, and their advisors from interpreting and manipulating the requirements and the exceptions in the existing regulations to avoid disclosing and registering transactions. More importantly, these new rules will ensure that we have a web of rules that will allow us to move quickly from the disclosure of a transaction by a taxpayer to the promoter, and from there to the promoter's list of investors to find other taxpayers who have engaged in questionable transactions. We believe that taxpayers and promoters today are betting that they can hide from scrutiny, and we want to make that a losing bet.

I would like to point out that the complexity of our tax Code in many cases gives rise to corporate tax benefits. If a taxpayer is willing to fully disclose the details of a transaction and defend it on the merits, that is all we can ask. For those transactions that produce tax benefits under the Code but should not, early detection will allow us to quickly seek legislative changes.

We are deliberately casting a broader net than exists under the current rules. Under current rules, transactions that the IRS has identified as a tax avoidance, or listed, transactions, must be disclosed and registered, and we will keep that rule. We are replacing, however, the multi-factor 2-of-5 test and related exceptions in the current rules, with clear categories designed to capture the types of transactions we are most

REQUEST FOR GOVERNOR RIDGE TO TESTIFY

Governor Ridge has been asked to testify before Congress. The Administration believes strongly that the Governor – as one of the President’s closest White House advisors – should adhere to the long-standing practice under which such close Presidential advisors do not testify before Congress.

The Administration recognizes the needs of Congress to receive information to perform its constitutional responsibilities. Governor Ridge has offered and held numerous meetings and briefings with Members of Congress. The Governor will continue to work closely with Congress, including the relevant Committees, in a manner consistent with this long-standing practice. Just as significantly, each of the departments and agencies with operational and budget authority will also continue to work with and testify before the Congress.

Why the Director of Homeland Security should not testify

- Presidents of both parties, for at least 50 years, have taken the position that their closest advisers cannot be forced to and ordinarily will not testify before Congress on policy matters. This position, based on the Constitution's separation of powers, has long been accepted by the Congress.
- Governor Ridge is the President’s chief advisor on homeland security issues. As an Assistant to the President, a non-confirmed position, he has no authority to hire or fire, except in his immediate office.
- The Director of Homeland Security serves as a coordinator between various agencies and departments. The National Security Advisor, who has a similar coordinating role between agencies, does not testify, nor do the White House Chief of Staff, Counsel, and other officials.
- Administrations of both parties have adhered to this position, except for instances involving substantial evidence of personal or official wrongdoing. Three examples have been cited where White House officials have testified during WWII, all of which involve congressional investigations of personal or official wrongdoing. Donald Nelson testified in response to an inquiry into numerous allegations of financial corruption within the government’s war effort. Donald Dawson was investigated for accepting cash and other favors for providing favorable treatment on loan applications. Jonathan Daniels was called to testify regarding allegations that he had improperly forced the head of the REA to resign over a particular decision.
- Officials within the Executive Office of the President that serve in Senate confirmed positions in statutorily-created agencies regularly testify before Congress. These offices include the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, the Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisors, and the Director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy.

Meeting Congress' Need for Information

- The Administration and Governor Ridge have regularly met with Congress and provided extensive information on homeland security.
- Governor Ridge assumed his responsibilities October 8, 2001. Since that time Governor Ridge and his staff have held over 100 meetings with Members of Congress and staff, and briefed various committees in the House and Senate. He has also repeatedly reached out to the bipartisan leadership of the Senate, and most recently met with the Senate caucuses of both parties. And, he has offered to meet with the committees of jurisdiction in a non-testimonial format at their convenience.
- During this short period of time, Governor Ridge has been working with the relevant executive branch departments and agencies on important homeland security issues such as Border Reorganization, the Threat Alert System, anthrax and bioterrorism, food safety, and ensuring security at home at events such as the Olympics, and the Super Bowl.
- Governor Ridge does not have operational or budget authority over any federal agency except his own office within the White House. The Threat Alert System is an example of an initiative that the Governor coordinated with various agencies which was ultimately turned over to DOJ for a period of comment, and DOJ will eventually handle the actual operation of the program.
- Administration officials with operational and budgetary authority, including the Secretary of Defense and the Attorney General, have repeatedly testified before Congress on homeland security matters. They have also provided Members of Congress with periodic briefings.

Moving forward in the future.

- The Administration and Governor Ridge recognize that the country faces significant issues regarding homeland security and that it will take the cooperation of both branches working together to solve them.
- The Administration is committed to meeting Congressional needs for information consistent with the principle of separation of powers.
- Governor Ridge looks forward to continuing to meet with Members of Congress, the 14 committees with jurisdiction over homeland security, and to brief committees on an ongoing basis.

Response to Specific Examples of testimony during WWII

Questions have been raised about three Presidential advisors who testified during World War II. Those examples only support the conclusion that Presidential advisors do not ordinarily testify on policy matters.

The three examples raised all appear to involve congressional investigations of personal or official wrongdoing, which is the one situation in which Presidential advisors often have testified in the past and which is distinct from testimony about policy matters.

- Donald Nelson apparently was one of the corporate executive "dollar a year" men whom Congress investigated as part of its inquiry into numerous allegations of financial corruption within the government's war effort. In addition, Nelson held a position as head of the War Production Board that, under the executive order creating it, gave him a degree of formal authority over agencies that close Presidential advisors ordinarily do not possess.
- Donald Dawson was investigated for accepting cash and other favors for providing favorable treatment on loan applications.
- Jonathan Daniels was called to testify regarding allegations that he had improperly forced the head of the REA to resign over a particular decision.

I would appreciate your comments. Please be critical:

A Federal court may assert jurisdiction over a case that involves State-law claims if the plaintiffs and defendants are citizens of different States and the amount in controversy exceeds a certain amount (now $75,000). The Constitution provides for so-called "diversity jurisdiction" to prevent State-court discrimination against out-of-state defendants.

This constitutional purpose is often frustrated in class action cases. First, the $75,000 requirement has been interpreted to require that each plaintiff,s claim exceed $75,000 no matter how much might be at stake for an out-of-state defendant from thousands or even millions of claims each individually worth less than $75,000. Second, courts have required all named plaintiffs to be citizens of different States than the defendants (not simply one plaintiff and one defendant), a requirement easily evaded by an energetic plaintiff,s counsel who can manage to find one plaintiff from the same State as the defendant.

The consequence of these two legal interpretations has been that huge, bet-the-company class actions remain in State court. That contravenes the historic purpose of diversity jurisdiction. Plaintiffs, attorneys have feasted on the legal loophole, choosing to file class actions against out-of-state defendants in friendly local courts (often with elected trial judges), which in turn has often coerced defendants to agree to massive settlements entirely unrelated to the merits of the claims. The phenomenon has now prompted action by the House.

A separate problem with class actions has been that the individual consumers

MARCH 19, 2002

MEMORANDUM TO NEC PRINCIPALS

FROM: CARLOS BONILLA

SUBJECT: AVIATION WAR & TERRORISM INSURANCE

As part of the Air Transportation and System Stabilization Act, the Federal Government began to directly provide war and terrorism insurance to the nation's airlines (and through the airlines indirectly to the airports, vendors and contractors who do business with the airlines). At the time the Act was passed, the nation faced a transportation crisis as the world's insurers had exercised their prerogative to cancel war and terrorism policies on seven day's notice. Airlines will not fly without insurance, either because their lenders and lessors will not permit the planes to be flown without insurance or because their Boards of Directors will not allow the carrier to operate without it. This federal insurance was understood by all the parties to be of a temporary nature.

Since September 11, a certain measure of stability has been achieved in the insurance markets. To be sure, prices have increased since September 11, but carriers are readily able to secure insurance should their planes be involved in an incident. The key exception is that insurance coverage for third party losses from acts of war and terrorism (the occupants of the World Trade Center, for example) has been limited to $50 million. Prior to September 11, the carriers were able to secure approximately $1.5 billion in coverage for all perils at about five cents a passenger. Today the much more limited private coverage which is in force costs about $1.25 a passenger.

This memo outlines the three options that are under discussion to address the problem of third party losses from acts of war and terrorism:

- Private Insurance: One insurer, AIG, has come forward with a proposal to underwrite approximately $1 billion in war and terrorism coverage at an additional cost of $1.50-$1.85 a passenger.
- Equitime: The airline industry is attempting to create a captive insurer that would be capitalized by the industry and, over time, accumulate reserves to replace the federal insurance program.
- War Principles: This position argues that war (of which terrorism is a subset) should not be paid for through the tort and insurance system. The correct position is not to debate how to best pay for insurance against third-party losses but rather to recognize them as costs to be borne by society not litigated by the trial lawyers. This would require a legislative solution removing a third party's right to sue for losses suffered from acts of war and terrorism.

On March 11 the Department of Transportation announced a 60 day extension in its current war risk insurance program. The clear understanding was that this time would be used to adopt a long-term solution to the problem, if needed.

The Private Market Option

Following September 11, the Administration formulated several core principles to guide policymaking efforts related to the federal provision of terrorism insurance in the context of property-casualty losses. These fundamental principles apply with equal force to the aviation industry. These principles included:

- The primary goal of government policy should be to help build private sector capacity: The private insurance market has, in the past, proven its ability to expand capacity in response to new risks. Private insurance markets have the ability to effectively spread risk, while simultaneously providing proper incentives for risk mitigation and loss containment through pricing. However, limited government intervention may be appropriate to provide some additional capacity and certainty to private markets during a transition period.
- Private sector capacity is already beginning to develop. Already, a number of private insurance groups, including AIG, Berkshire Hathaway, and Allianz, have entered the international market for third party liability war risk insurance since the end of September 2001. Berkshire Hathaway and AIG are making package offers to a group of British airlines, with AIG currently offering up to $1 billion per occurrence coverage (excess of $50 million) for approximately 75 cents per passenger. This is significantly lower than the $1.85 per passenger that has been assumed in many U.S. discussions – a price that appears to have been “floated” shortly after 9/11 – suggesting that market forces are beginning to work and that offer prices are falling.
- The presence of the government in the private market likely dampens competition and distorts pricing. We cannot assume that today’s distribution of observed prices for insurance is a market equilibrium, because the market cannot operate efficiently while the government provides insurance at prices below the actuarially fair level. In fact, there really is no true observed pricing distribution available in the U.S. at this time because no U.S. airline has sought out an official quote from the leading insurers. This lack of pricing requests is due to the existence of the FAA program.
- Given an opportunity, market forces will continue to drive prices down. If AIG, for example, offers insurance at unreasonably high prices, other insurers (e.g., Berkshire Hathaway, Allianz) will have the profit incentive to come in to undercut AIG. It is important to bear in mind, however, that if expected losses from a terrorist related airline event could average $1 billion per year, as suggested in a recent DOT memo, then the total premia collected for that market should reasonably be expected to be at least $1 billion per year.
- Government policy should promote proper incentives for risk mitigation and loss containment: If the government provides excess loss insurance at taxpayer-subsidized rates, economic actors will not face the proper economic incentives. This distortion may result in sub-optimal investment in security or other prevention activities.

- Any government involvement should be strictly limited to a short transition period: The federal government should seek to limit the duration of its participation in insurance markets to the shortest possible time frame so as to encourage restoration of private markets.

The EQUITIME Solution

Through their trade association, the Air Transport Association (ATA), the major U.S. airlines have proposed forming a risk retention group (RRG) to provide passenger and third party war risk liability insurance. The RRG is tentatively named Equitime. It would provide direct insurance to its members, charging a premium and providing up to $2 billion in coverage. While Equitime accumulates sufficient reserves to cover potential claims, it would purchase reinsurance from the FAA. If commercial reinsurance becomes reasonably available, Equitime would purchase it and phase out FAA coverage. On February 28, the ATA board unanimously agreed to proceed with implementation of Equitime. ATA has stated to the FAA that Equitime could be operational as early as June. An international RRG is also being discussed by member states of the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO), but if ultimately approved by ICAO, implementation would take much longer than Equitime. In early March, the Association of European Airlines stated that it also is considering forming an RRG for its members.

If implemented, Equitime would provide war risk liability coverage to ground handlers and other vendors, agents and subcontractors of air carriers for appropriate premiums. The formation of Equitime would provide ground handlers and others with a competitive option in negotiating lower premium rates and higher coverage limits.

FAA EXIT OBJECTIVE

FAA war risk insurance is currently being provided as an emergency measure “necessary in the interest of air commerce.” The FAA’s long-term goal is to help to reestablish a private insurance market that provides aviation war risk insurance on reasonable terms. However, the means to achieve that goal should not derogate air commerce vital to the U.S. economy. In developing its exit strategy, the FAA should encourage competition among private insurers to the maximum degree possible while providing airlines and passengers with sufficient time to acclimate to the increased cost of war risk insurance.

In view of the present state of the private insurance market, the Department of Transportation has recommended that authorization for FAA insurance should be extended for a six-month period. The six-month extension would allow time to facilitate a transition by the FAA first to a reduced role in providing insurance, and eventually to an exit from the market.

During the six-month extension period, the FAA would pursue two paths. First, a six-month extension would provide Equitime and the participating U.S. carriers with a sufficient certainty to continue their efforts and make the necessary capital contributions to implement the RRG, with some assurance that there would not be an abrupt reversal of U.S. policy. Under Equitime, the FAA would act as a reinsurer and as Equitime's reserves grow, FAA's participation would decrease. FAA support for Equitime would not preclude support for an ICAO-sponsored RRG if it is formed. In addition, in either structure, FAA reinsurance would be replaced by private insurance if it became available on similar terms.

Second, DOT recommends that the FAA begin a phased withdrawal from providing direct war risk insurance. A six-month extension would facilitate such a phase out by minimizing the disruption likely to result from this change and by giving insurers additional time to return to the market. Such a phased exit would allow the FAA to better gauge, in steps, how quickly and to what degree private insurers were prepared to compete for the airlines' business. An initial step would likely be to raise the premium charged by the FAA. The FAA could subsequently begin raising the floor above which it writes insurance, now at $50 million, thereby requiring U.S. air carriers, in steps, to secure increased coverage from the private market.

DOT believes that both of these approaches would stimulate competition and hasten the return of the private market. Equitime would effectively inject a new competitor into the market, and, because it threatens to lock up a significant piece of the insurance business for a one-year period, may stimulate private insurers to attempt to preempt its formation by offering rates competitive with Equitime. Equitime could also stimulate insurers to offer reinsurance rates in competition with the FAA, thus hastening FAA's departure from the field.

The War Principles Option

Current US law does not differentiate between torts caused by normal forces, economic or otherwise, and acts of war, including terrorism. Individuals and corporations can be subject to the same processes we criticize as abusive in the normal course of business. No airline in the country, or its lenders, felt confident that juries would consistently reject the argument had they only acted in a certain manner – arming flight attendants for example – we could have avoided the disaster of September 11. The airlines, indeed all of American business, can deal with its own losses. It cannot and should not have to deal with the economy wide costs of war.

In the immediate aftermath of September 11, the Federal Government had a limited number of options. Notably, it could not retrospectively take away a perceived right to sue even when the cause of harm was an act of war or terrorism. For any future acts of war and terrorism, however, we currently have a clean slate to define the legal and social landscape for American society to operate under. The solution is to abolish the right to sue other individuals simply because they came before you in the chain of events that constituted an act of war.

This position argues that the costs of war are a societal obligation and that it is society not individuals (corporate or otherwise) who should shoulder the costs of war and terrorism. It was the fear of a torrent of litigation which gave rise to the structure of the airline stabilization act, notably its provision creating a special master to provide financial assistance to individuals harmed by the attack. A key point in the provision was the permanent exclusion from the fund of any individual who first tried to seek restitution through the tort system.

It is instructive to note that the Victims Compensation Fund had been offering settlement averaging $1.65 million to the victims of 9/11 and raised the average to $1.85 million after those settlements were criticized as inadequate. It is highly unlikely that more than a handful of these victims carried that much personal insurance. We are setting a dangerous precedent that acts of war should yield greater compensation than individuals are willing to provide for themselves.

In addition, the War Principles option will create a measure of fairness and uniformity in victim assistance. Under current practice, where individuals search for a deep pocket to blame, financial assistance is dependent on the success or failure of that search. Individuals "fortunate enough" to be the victims of an attack which uses a Fortune 500 corporation as its instrument of war can expect to be highly compensated. Others may receive no compensation.

At the same time, it is not desirable to abolish all individual responsibility for acts of war and terrorism. We should encourage individuals to provide for their own financial compensation for their own losses and acquire insurance to cover those personal losses. Moreover, lien holders will likely continue to demand such coverage. Similarly, there is no reason why the federal government should offer more financial assistance to an individual who dies in a terrorist attack than we do to an individual who dies prematurely of a heart attack. We should continue to encourage these efforts, if for no other reason than to create a climate of individual responsibility.

Conversely, a system such as we have today can prove to be a stifling force. Businesses and individuals may very well curtail their activities, abandoning urban areas for example, if the costs of having to insure against the catastrophic and unpredictable costs of war may be placed on their shoulders.

Finally, a large incident would likely overwhelm the resources of the insurance system. When those resources are exhausted there will be no option but for the federal government to intervene with both compensation and legal remedies. Rather than wait until such a time it makes more sense to act preemptively and enhance market confidence.

Any such move must be accompanied by a clear statement that in the event of an act of war the federal government will step in to assist those members of society who have been harmed. The amount of assistance will depend on the extent of the losses suffered and cannot be set in advance, for we cannot know the costs of war in advance. In small incidents we will be able to make everyone whole. In larger incidents we may only be able to offer partial remedies.

MARCH 19, 2002

MEMORANDUM TO NEC PRINCIPALS

FROM: CARLOS BONILLA

SUBJECT: AVIATION WAR & TERRORISM INSURANCE

As part of the Air Transportation and System Stabilization Act, the Federal Government began to directly provide war and terrorism insurance to the nation's airlines (and through the airlines indirectly to the airports, vendors and contractors who do business with the airlines). At the time the Act was passed, the nation faced a transportation crisis as the world's insurers had exercised their prerogative to cancel war and terrorism policies on seven day's notice. Airlines will not fly without insurance, either because their lenders and lessors will not permit the planes to be flown without insurance or because their Boards of Directors will not allow the carrier to operate without it. This federal insurance was understood by all the parties to be of a temporary nature.

Since September 11, a certain measure of stability has been achieved in the insurance markets. To be sure, prices have increased since September 11, but carriers are readily able to secure insurance should their planes be involved in an incident. The key exception is that insurance coverage for third party losses from acts of war and terrorism (the occupants of the World Trade Center, for example) has been limited to $50 million. Prior to September 11, the carriers were able to secure approximately $1.5 billion in coverage for all perils at about five cents a passenger. Today the much more limited private coverage which is in force costs about $1.25 a passenger.

This memo outlines the three options that are under discussion to address the problem of third party losses from acts of war and terrorism:

- Private Insurance: One insurer, AIG, has come forward with a proposal to underwrite approximately $1 billion in war and terrorism coverage at an additional cost of $1.50-$1.85 a passenger.
- Equitime: The airline industry is attempting to create a captive insurer that would be capitalized by the industry and, over time, accumulate reserves to replace the federal insurance program.
- War Principles: This position argues that war (of which terrorism is a subset) should not be paid for through the tort and insurance system. The correct position is not to debate how to best pay for insurance against third-party losses but rather to recognize them as costs to be borne by society not litigated by the trial lawyers. This would require a legislative solution removing a third party's right to sue for losses suffered from acts of war and terrorism.

On March 11 the Department of Transportation announced a 60 day extension in its current war risk insurance program. The clear understanding was that this time would be used to adopt a long-term solution to the problem, if needed.

The Private Market Option

Following September 11, the Administration formulated several core principles to guide policymaking efforts related to the federal provision of terrorism insurance in the context of property-casualty losses. These fundamental principles apply with equal force to the aviation industry. These principles included:

- The primary goal of government policy should be to help build private sector capacity: The private insurance market has, in the past, proven its ability to expand capacity in response to new risks. Private insurance markets have the ability to effectively spread risk, while simultaneously providing proper incentives for risk mitigation and loss containment through pricing. However, limited government intervention may be appropriate to provide some additional capacity and certainty to private markets during a transition period.
- Private sector capacity is already beginning to develop. Already, a number of private insurance groups, including AIG, Berkshire Hathaway, and Allianz, have entered the international market for third party liability war risk insurance since the end of September 2001. Berkshire Hathaway and AIG are making package offers to a group of British airlines, with AIG currently offering up to $1 billion per occurrence coverage (excess of $50 million) for approximately 75 cents per passenger. This is significantly lower than the $1.85 per passenger that has been assumed in many U.S. discussions – a price that appears to have been “floated” shortly after 9/11 – suggesting that market forces are beginning to work and that offer prices are falling.
- The presence of the government in the private market likely dampens competition and distorts pricing. We cannot assume that today’s distribution of observed prices for insurance is a market equilibrium, because the market cannot operate efficiently while the government provides insurance at prices below the actuarially fair level. In fact, there really is no true observed pricing distribution available in the U.S. at this time because no U.S. airline has sought out an official quote from the leading insurers. This lack of pricing requests is due to the existence of the FAA program.
- Given an opportunity, market forces will continue to drive prices down. If AIG, for example, offers insurance at unreasonably high prices, other insurers (e.g., Berkshire Hathaway, Allianz) will have the profit incentive to come in to undercut AIG. It is important to bear in mind, however, that if expected losses from a terrorist related airline event could average $1 billion per year, as suggested in a recent DOT memo, then the total premia collected for that market should reasonably be expected to be at least $1 billion per year.
- Government policy should promote proper incentives for risk mitigation and loss containment: If the government provides excess loss insurance at taxpayer-subsidized rates, economic actors will not face the proper economic incentives. This distortion may result in sub-optimal investment in security or other prevention activities.

- Any government involvement should be strictly limited to a short transition period: The federal government should seek to limit the duration of its participation in insurance markets to the shortest possible time frame so as to encourage restoration of private markets.

The EQUITIME Solution

Through their trade association, the Air Transport Association (ATA), the major U.S. airlines have proposed forming a risk retention group (RRG) to provide passenger and third party war risk liability insurance. The RRG is tentatively named Equitime. It would provide direct insurance to its members, charging a premium and providing up to $2 billion in coverage. While Equitime accumulates sufficient reserves to cover potential claims, it would purchase reinsurance from the FAA. If commercial reinsurance becomes reasonably available, Equitime would purchase it and phase out FAA coverage. On February 28, the ATA board unanimously agreed to proceed with implementation of Equitime. ATA has stated to the FAA that Equitime could be operational as early as June. An international RRG is also being discussed by member states of the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO), but if ultimately approved by ICAO, implementation would take much longer than Equitime. In early March, the Association of European Airlines stated that it also is considering forming an RRG for its members.

If implemented, Equitime would provide war risk liability coverage to ground handlers and other vendors, agents and subcontractors of air carriers for appropriate premiums. The formation of Equitime would provide ground handlers and others with a competitive option in negotiating lower premium rates and higher coverage limits.

FAA EXIT OBJECTIVE

FAA war risk insurance is currently being provided as an emergency measure “necessary in the interest of air commerce.” The FAA’s long-term goal is to help to reestablish a private insurance market that provides aviation war risk insurance on reasonable terms. However, the means to achieve that goal should not derogate air commerce vital to the U.S. economy. In developing its exit strategy, the FAA should encourage competition among private insurers to the maximum degree possible while providing airlines and passengers with sufficient time to acclimate to the increased cost of war risk insurance.

In view of the present state of the private insurance market, the Department of Transportation has recommended that authorization for FAA insurance should be extended for a six-month period. The six-month extension would allow time to facilitate a transition by the FAA first to a reduced role in providing insurance, and eventually to an exit from the market.

During the six-month extension period, the FAA would pursue two paths. First, a six-month extension would provide Equitime and the participating U.S. carriers with a FAA support for Equitime would not preclude support for an ICAO-sponsored RRG if it is formed. -- We never saw Diana's memo.

-- Who has the action for making changes at this point?
-- I agree on 1.
-- On 2, the point, I believe, is not to challenge those long-standing SCT interpretations in ordinary cases; it is the rules' application to modern nationwide class actions that created the wacky situation, which I think can fairly be described as an unintended loophole that is being badly abused. Anyway, I did not sense confusion on that point in the memo, but adding "modern" before "class-action cases" in the third sentence may help clarify.
-- On 3, Marshall, J., probably could not dream of some of the modern class action abuses. Anyway, the point about certain state trial courts remains a strong policy point, in my judgment. In addition, the point you raise about uniformity and efficiency is an excellent one and was not in either the first draft I saw of this memo or in this one. I would definitely add whatever you and Diana think best on that on uniformity and efficiency.

Subject: class actions

I just saw the red dot on class actions. If it did not yet go to the President, I would suggest a few changes/ additions:

Memo should mention that the President endorsed the minimal diversity change during the campaign and again in a recent SAP so that he doesn't get the impression that his position on the bill is up for grabs. First para should mention that the complete diversity requirement and amount in controversy requirement are products of longstanding SCt law (I think that the rules are something like 196 yrs old and 80+ yrs old respectively). The memo leaves the impression that we're fixing some wacky court interpretations -- especially the line that plaintiff's lawyers are feasting on a "legal loophole."
As Diana and I have discussed, I don't think we should pin our support for the bill on the view that the complete diversity requirement frustrates or contravenes a constl purpose. The SCt (starting with Marshall, J.) doesn't think so. The const allows for either minimal or complete diversity rules; starting with the first judiciary act, Congress chose to adopt a complete diversity requirement that would leave some out-of-state defts subject to the bias of in-state courts. I think we should presume that this 200-year old rule was fully consistent with (though not required by) the intent of the framers, but that we have policy reasons for wanting to change the rule. "We distrust state courts" is a less persuasive policy argument for reform than our interest in uniformity and efficiency (especially if our audience is the President). I think that Diana had a good description of the problem with the current state of the law in her earlier draft of the memo.

Today's Washington Post (Federal page) reports that you and Sandy Berger have previously "testified" before Congress. Is this accurate? This is being cited by Congress as precedent for the Congressional insistence that Governor Ridge testify.

Where are you? I spoke to Moose again, and we are firmly convinced that accepting a donation of a car for a motorcade is a bad idea. So, unless I hear from you, I am going to tell them "no" in S.C., and you and Moose can discuss the issue more thoroughly when you speak to the Advance Office.

Tony--To help Brett our here, can you estimate the number of boxes that were due to the bulk hits? Since each bulk hit would be a file of all the bulkl e-mail for that day, is it likely the majority of the boxes would be bulk e-mail, and if so how many?

Adam, Brett;

Even though I did not get an E-mail from you confirming your agreement with the terms and scope of the ARMS search we discussed on Wed 3/20/02, I went ahead and started the search anyway.

The search jobs have completed and the following are the results by agency/Month. I separated the hits against the Bulk mail so you could decide if you want it delivered or not.

I strongly recommend delivery via CD rather than via paper (Expressed on Wed as your preference) because the quantity is fairly large, I have estimated the number of boxes on the grid below.

Please let me know the following.

- a) How you want delivery (CD, URL, Paper)
- b) If you want the Bulk mail included or not

I will not proceed in either direction until I hear from you.

Thanks

Later... Tony

Adam, Brett;

The following is a search definition, estimate and schedule for the ARMS search request we discussed this afternoon. Please review this to make sure it is what you want and let me know how to proceed.

Search Definition:

Search all ARMS records in the WHO,OPD,NSC and DEFAULT buckets created or received between Sep 1 2001 and December 31 2001 (4 months) for the following search string combinations:

Global and relief and foundation
or
" GRF "
bridgeview
or holy and land and foundation
or
" HLF "
or holy and land
or benevolence and international and foundation
or
" BIF "
or judith and miller
or kurt and eichenwald
or philip and shenon
or
" OFAC "

Note 1 Case does not matter in this search

REV_00142214

Note 2 The term "holyland" is covered by the terms holy and land
Note 3 There is a space character before and after the abbreviation terms.

Note 4 The search will produce a hit when any of these string combinations is found anywhere in the ARMS record.

Note 5 The Bulk mail in the WHO bucket will be included with this search.

Search Estimate:

Setup and delivery time 8 hours at $40 per hour $ 320

Runtime:

WHO 4 X 8 CPU hours

OPD 4 X 4 CPU hours

NSC 4 X 4 CPU hours

DEFAULT 4 x 2 CPU hours

Total 72 CPU hours @ $600 per CPU

hour $43,200

$ 100

Total

cost

$43,620

Search Schedule:

This search will take 1 day to run and another day to assemble the results. I will start the search as soon as I get word from you to proceed. Assuming that is tomorrow, I should have results by Friday 3/22/02

Later... Tony

Probably widely distributed to Hill/GOP supporters -- so they could do battle for us in the media.
But probably not publicly.
Susan Neely (OHS press sec.) or Gordon Johndroe (deputy) would know the details if you want to call them direct. Or if you prefer I can.

Adam, Brett;

Even though I did not get an E-mail from you confirming your agreement with the terms and scope of the ARMS search we discussed on Wed 3/20/02, I went ahead and started the search anyway.

The search jobs have completed and the following are the results by agency/Month. I separated the hits against the Bulk mail so you could decide if you want it delivered or not.

I strongly recommend delivery via CD rather than via paper (Expressed on Wed as your preference) because the quantity is fairly large, I have estimated the number of boxes on the grid below.

Please let me know the following.

- a) How you want delivery (CD, URL, Paper)
- b) If you want the Bulk mail included or not

I will not proceed in either direction until I hear from you.

Adam, Brett;

The following is a search definition, estimate and schedule for the ARMS search request we discussed this afternoon. Please review this to make sure it is what you want and let me know how to proceed.

Search Definition:

Search all ARMS records in the WHO,OPD,NSC and DEFAULT buckets created or received between Sep 1 2001 and December 31 2001 (4 months) for the following search string combinations:

Global and relief and foundation
or
" GRF "
bridgeview
or holy and land and foundation
or
" HLF "
or holy and land
or benevolence and international and foundation
or
" BIF "
or judith and miller
or kurt and eichenwald
or philip and shenon
or
" OFAC "

Note 1 Case does not matter in this search

Note 2 The term "holyland" is covered by the terms holy and land

Note 3 There is a space character before and after the abbreviation terms.

Note 4 The search will produce a hit when any of these string combinations is found anywhere in the ARMS record.

Note 5 The Bulk mail in the WHO bucket will be included with this search.

Search Estimate:

Setup and delivery time 8 hours at $40 per hour $ 320

Runtime:

WHO 4 X 8 CPU hours

OPD 4 X 4 CPU hours

NSC 4 X 4 CPU hours

DEFAULT 4 x 2 CPU hours

Total 72 CPU hours @ $600 per CPU

hour $43,200

$ 100

Total

cost

$43,620

Search Schedule:

This search will take 1 day to run and another day to assemble the results. I will start the search as soon as I get word from you to proceed. Assuming that is tomorrow, I should have results by Friday 3/22/02

There is a proposed Terrorism Insurance Event on the President's schedule for April 8th.

Marc would like to have an event planning meeting tomorrow at 4:30 to discuss what outside groups/participants should be invited.

The meeting will take place in EEOB 180

If you can not attend, but would like to send a list of participants who you feel should be invited please send me a list.

Thanks,
Leslie

Just one minor item -- the bill we will receive will not be S. 27 - it will be H.R. 2356, the 'Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 2002'.

Louise: Can you pass along to Legal Advisor's office a request from White House Counsel. For guidance purposes, we need a memo summarizing current legal and State Dept. restrictions on the political activities of Ambassadors. If you could pass this request along and either e-mail or FAX the appropriate memo to me at 456-5104, that would be great. (My phone is 456-7984.)

Subject: Terrorism Insurance Event Planning Meeting

There is a proposed Terrorism Insurance Event on the President's schedule for April 8th.

Marc would like to have an event planning meeting tomorrow at 4:30 to discuss what outside groups/participants should be invited.

The meeting will take place in EEOB 180

If you can not attend, but would like to send a list of participants who you feel should be invited please send me a list.

Thanks,
Leslie

I have conferred with the Legal Adviser at the Department of State because Ambassadors must comply with a variety of additional State Department restrictions beyond those imposed by statute and general regulation. These State Department restrictions substantially limit political activity by Ambassadors -- particularly at their posts. However, the State Department expressly permits Ambassadors to make financial contributions to political candidates, parties, or organizations, including to campaign committees or party committees, subject to applicable state and federal limitations.

Please let me know if you have additional questions or requests.

Subject: Pinehurst (NC) Pilot re: Sen. Edwards on Pickering

FYI.

Pinehurst Pilot's Hackney writes, "I wasn't exactly shocked when my phone rang" 3/20 and it was Edwards. Two days earlier, a Pilot editorial criticized him for his opposition to Judge Charles Pickering's nomination. The "editorial raised the suggestion that by opposing Pickering, Edwards was kowtowing to left wing" Dems. During the "20-minute conversation, Edwards didn't rant and rave. On the contrary, he was entirely cordial and said he merely wanted to make it clear to me why he voted against Pickering. He did not ask that his side of the story be published and made it a point to say he was making no such request." He "insisted at the outset that he opposed Pickering as a matter of principle, not in an effort to endear himself to liberal Democrats." Before the Senate Jud Cmte held hearings, Edwards said, "I didn't even know who he was." As the proceedings continued, Edwards "said, he became troubled by several aspects of Pickering's handling of" a cross-burning case. Edwards said

REV_00142274

Pickering "acted illegally or improperly" in several instances: "When the law was in conflict with what he wanted to do, he ignored the law." Edwards: "I didn't want to be the champion of Northern liberals against a Southern judicial nominee. I never accused him of being a racist or of being racially insensitive. And I haven't gone Washington." Edwards "noted that Pickering is the first" Bush's judicial nominees he's opposed. We "aren't taking back" our editorial. But Edwards' "insistence that he did what he did out of conscience and not due to presidential aspirations rings true." So "maybe he hasn't gone Washington. After all, he went to the trouble to pick up the phone, call his hometown paper and clarify where he was coming from. That's the North Carolina way" (3/22).

Kyle: Tim and the Judge will each get an additional allotment of 20 tix, above and beyond their initial 20. So you might see if Libby and/or Allison are willing to give you one out of that 40.

Staff will be issued 4 tickets to use for the Easter Egg Roll. A passholder is allowed to pick up tickets for only one other staff member (must have signed permission slip). This will be strictly enforced. Everyone (passholder included) who wants to get to the South Lawn must have a ticket. Staff will not be turned away if they do not have children in their group. Everyone is reminded that this is a children's event. There will be a staff distribution of the wooden eggs and the Historical Society will be selling the eggs starting April 2nd.

I know some of you have worked on travel-related and frequent flyer issues in the past. If this seems like something one of you would have a quick bead on, let me know and I'll refer it over. If not, I'll handle. Thanks.

You should be very careful about this response. For one thing, I do not think you can get away with saying you don't "employ" volunteers, just because you don't pay them. "Employ" can mean "to use." Plus, it's too cute.

Any thoughts on a response to this? For background, Adam Greenstone has told me that there are two types of volunteers: those who are not

Moose. Desiree asked me to pass this through you before responding to Liz with volunteer information. As you see below I've been asked again for numbers of volunteers for a Congressional office. The last time there was a request for numbers of volunteers that were paid by the White House. I always thought those terms were mutually exclusive.

The first part of this request also uses that term -- employed. We do not employ any volunteers. We do, however, have a roll of approximately 815 volunteers -- not all of which are being utilized. They are used in Correspondence's various departments, the First Lady's office, the Vice President and Mrs. Cheney's offices, Visitor's office, NEC, Scheduling, Photo office, Faith-based, Political Affairs, White House Fellows, PPO, Conference Center, Freedom Corps, AIDS Policy Office, Press Office, Records Mgmt, Public Liaison and others that I may not even know about. This information is due back to Liz by cob tomorrow. Would you mind recommending a response? I'd appreciate it.

Thanks.
Laurie

Laurie:
We received the following question for the record from Congressman Steny H. Hoyer as a result of an appropriations hearing held March 14 on the EOP's FY 2003 budget request:

How many volunteers are currently employed within the Executive Office of the President?

From the HRM database, I can retrieve the "Student Volunteer" numbers for all of EOP, but for those volunteers that fall outside of the HRM database, mainly White House Office volunteers, I need your assistance. For the record, can you provide the number and types of volunteers currently serving the White House Office as of March 15th? We will not provide the types of jobs they have, but we may need that for later. None of this information will be released to the Congressman prior to White House Counsel approval. Please provide the volunteer numbers and types by close of business, Thursday, March 28. If you have any questions or concerns, please call or email me.

I know that various people in this office have worked on issues relating to the use of government vehicles for home-to-work transportation. Please let me know if you have any comments on the following DoD proposal, which is working its way through the OMB process. Thanks.

SEC. ____ . PASSENGER CARRIER
USE.

Paragraph (5) of section 1344(b) of title 31, United States Code, is amended by inserting "the commanders of combatant commands assigned under section 164 of title 10," after "Joint Chiefs of Staff,".

Section-by-Section Analysis

Section 1344 of title 31, United States Code, authorizes domicile-to-duty vehicle transportation for the Deputy Secretary of Defense and the Under Secretaries of Defense, the Secretary of the Air Force, the Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, the members and Vice Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and the Commandant of the Coast Guard.

This proposal serves to enhance safety and security for these important senior military leaders. It would add the Commanders of Combatant Commands as authorized users of domicile-to-duty transportation.

Currently, officers not listed in section 1344 are required to submit requests to the Secretary of Defense, every 90 days, for permission to use domicile-to-duty vehicle transportation support. Once domicile-to-duty request is approved, The Secretary of Defense is required to provide officials with written authorization, not to exceed a 90 period. This proposal will eliminate three levels of redundant administrative processing (at CINC, CJCS, and OSD levels) associated with seeking Secretary of Defense approval every 90 days to permit domicile-to-duty transportation for these senior military leaders.

OK to attend. Do not use invite on title. Moose can answer how the value of the ticket to the concert should be handled.

Ken has been asked to attend a fundraiser for McCrery's Leadership PAC on April 23rd. The event is actually going to be the Paul McCartney concert at the MCI center. It will be about 18 people sitting in a suite who pay $2500 to McCrery's PAC. They will probably send out a flyer. I told them to put "the honorable ken mehlman", but they wanted to add "political director for George W. Bush".

Is it ok for him to attend this? (i was worried that the ticket would be a gift)
Is it ok to add the title on the invite?

thanks.

The good news is that we no longer have time with the President next Thursday, thus the paper I am late getting to you is no longer as time critical as it was earlier.

I will be sending a draft for further discussion this afternoon. In the interim, could you each please let me know your availability over the next ten days, as well as that of your Principal. I recognize that a lot of us would like to take a little break around now, so I'd like to try to work around everyone's calendars.

The President rarely gets this partisan. This issue must have hit a chord:

There is no more fundamental issue than to making sure we have a judiciary of people that do not interpret the law from the bench; people who do not try to write law from the bench. (Applause.) People who interpret the law and not try to write it.

And I put up a good man from Mississippi the other day. And I don't remember the senior senator from Georgia defending this man's honor. And we're going to have more fights when it comes to the judiciary. And I'm going to put strict constructionists on the bench. And I expect people in the United States Senate from a great state like Georgia to do what Zell Miller did, and stood up and defended the honor and integrity of Judge Pickering. And that's what Saxby Chambliss is going to do. (Applause.)

There will be a meeting with Rich Hertling and Bill Outhier of Sen. Thompson's Gov't Affairs staff to discuss the Lieberman letter request to Andy Card at 11:15 a.m. in my office (167 OEOB). Agenda is to discuss committee dynamics and to get their views on possible responses. I don't know who the right person is for this in Leg, but whoever it is should feel free to attend.

. . . This is an important election for Texas. And it's an important election for the country. We've got to have a man like John Cornyn representing our state in Washington. And there are a lot of reasons why.

First, we've got to get good, conservative judges appointed to the bench and approved by the United States Senate. (Applause.) I want people on the bench who don't try to use their position to legislate from the bench. We want people to interpret the law, not try to make law and write law. And I sent such a man up from Mississippi the other day -- a good, honest, honorable man, who had been approved unanimously by the United States Senate earlier -- and, yet, did not get a vote on the floor of the United States Senate.

We need people like John Cornyn in the United States Senate, who will work with the White House to have a solid judiciary, to make sure that the judges do what they're supposed to do in the United States and not overstep their bounds. (Applause.) . . .

Also, state-run arbitration systems exist in the telecommunications context. Under the '96 Telecom Act, incumbent local exchange carriers and new competitors privately negotiate interconnection rates, and if the parties have a dispute in the course of the negotiation of those agreements, the state steps in to arbitrate the disagreement between them and to help them arrive at an agreement. 47 USC 252. In that case, the state is not a party to the dispute but rather it is only the decisionmaker, in an adjudicatory but non-judicial way.

Still have not come up with an example of a FEDERAL government-run arbitration system where the government is not a party. (Cf. Federal Employees Compensation Act, under which the Secretary of Labor hears workers compensation claims (against itself) from federal employees).

Also am talking with Brett about question of exclusivity of an administrative process. We'll give you a call shortly.

Subject: New York Times story today on judges

Bush Vows To Seek Conservative Judges (NYT)
By ELISABETH BUMILLER

The New York Times, March 29, 2002

CRAWFORD, Tex., March 28 - In his first substantive response to the Democratic rejection of Judge Charles W. Pickering Sr. of Mississippi for a federal appeals court post, President Bush hit back today at the leadership of the Senate and said that he would continue to push for "good, conservative judges" on the nation's highest courts.

Mr. Bush spoke in Dallas at a lunch that raised $1.8 million for the Texas Republican Party and the Senate campaign of John Cornyn, the state's attorney general, before returning here to his 1,600-acre ranch. The lunch capped a two-day, three-state presidential swing that raised more than $4.3 million for Republican candidates and the party.

"We've got to get good, conservative judges appointed to the bench and approved by the United States Senate," Mr. Bush said to more than 1,000 people at the Hyatt Regency Hotel. On Wednesday night at a fundraiser in Atlanta, Mr. Bush said that "we're going to have more fights when it comes to the judiciary," and "I'm going to put strict constructionists on the bench."

Mr. Bush's words were a defiant response to Senate Democrats, who on March 14 rejected Judge Pickering, the president's nominee and his first judicial defeat, as too conservative. The Democrats said at the time that they also wanted to send a message that their majority in the Senate gave them the power to block his choices and that Mr. Bush should send up more moderates.

"We want to compromise with the president," Senator Charles E. Schumer, Democrat of New York, who is a member of the Judiciary Committee, said today. "If the president sends us judge after judge who is way out of the mainstream, it's going to create gridlock. The view that it's 'my way or the highway' is not going to get us anywhere."

Mr. Bush made clear today and on Wednesday night that he would not acquiesce, and that his solution was to aggressively raise money for his party's candidates in an effort to regain Republican control of the Senate in the November midterm elections.

"We need people like John Cornyn in the United States Senate, who will work with the White House to have a solid judiciary, to make sure that the judges do what they're supposed to do in the United States and not overstep their bounds," Mr. Bush said at the fund-raiser for Mr. Cornyn, repeating his frequent call for conservative judges who strictly interpret the Constitution.

"I want people on the bench who don't try to use their position to legislate from the bench," Mr. Bush said. "We want people to interpret the law, not try to make law and write law."

During his presidential campaign in November 1999, Mr. Bush said that the most important qualification of a judge was whether the judge would "strictly interpret the Constitution of the United States." He also singled out Justices Antonin Scalia and Clarence M. Thomas, the court's two most conservative members, as justices whom he held in high regard. Today in Dallas, Mr. Bush was appearing at his third fund-raiser for Republican Senate candidates in two days. The president's schedule showed how much the White House wanted Republicans to win control of the Senate, which has stymied crucial parts of Mr. Bush's legislative agenda. The White House says that five Senate seats, in South Dakota, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri and Georgia, are vulnerable to Republican takeover.

Today, Mr. Bush helped raise $1.4 million in $1,000 contributions for Mr. Cornyn, and $400,000 in unlimited soft-money donations to the Texas Republican Party. Earlier this week, White House officials said that the lunch for Mr. Cornyn could bring in $1.2 million to $1.5 million, but today David Beckwith, Mr. Cornyn's campaign spokesman, said that the event raised more than expected. Mr. Bush is an enormous draw on the Republican fund-raising circuit.

On Wednesday night in Atlanta, Mr. Bush helped raise more than $1.4 million for the Georgia Republican Party and the Senate campaign of Representative Saxby Chambliss, who is facing a primary challenge before he can run against Max Cleland, a Democrat who is the state's senior senator. The White House is backing Mr. Chambliss, even though supporters of state Representative Bob Irvin of Atlanta, Mr. Chambliss's primary opponent, have asked the president to stay out of the primary.

In some of his most partisan remarks since Sept. 11, Mr. Bush said in Atlanta that he had nominated a "a good man from Mississippi," a reference to Judge Pickering, who is a federal trial judge, "and I don't remember the senior senator from Georgia defending this man's honor."

Mr. Bush arrived at his ranch late on Wednesday, left today at 10 a.m. on Marine One for the one-hour helicopter flight to Dallas, met briefly with firefighters and rescue workers, made a 21-minute speech at the lunch for Mr. Cornyn, and was back at his ranch by midafternoon.

The president is to remain at his ranch through Easter morning, with no public events, and is to return to the White House on Sunday.

Josh and I have a very dumb legal question.

Suppose a physician leaves a sponge in a patient's stomach. The patient sues for and recovers $100K claiming that the sponge caused him to incur certain medical expenses and to miss weeks of work. A few months later, but still w/in the SOL, the patient dies b/c of complications caused by the sponge that were unknown to the patient at the time of his first suit. Can his heirs bring a wrongful death suit for additional damages b/c he is now dead?

I say that res judicata bars the second suit. Can you confirm or refute?

From Today's Chicago Sun Times

Work for Illinois GOP led to White House job

Tapped early on by the Bush administration, Richard Juliano quickly accepted a top job in the Transportation Department, moving his family from Park Ridge to the Washington suburbs.

As the Transportation Department's White House liaison, Juliano, 34, was the chief overseer of political appointments, handling a full range of personnel functions.

Juliano voluntarily resigned from the post on Friday, aware that an indictment was coming from the U.S. attorney. Juliano will plead guilty to one count of mail fraud stemming from when he was the deputy manager for Ryan's 1998 campaign for governor. He is cooperating with authorities.

The department said in a statement that Transportation Secretary Norman Mineta "has the highest personal regards for Rich who, from his first day on the job, served the department ably and with distinction."

Juliano arrived in Washington after a career tied to Gov. Ryan and aide Scott Fawell. In a statement from Juliano's lawyer, Fawell was called Juliano's "boss and political mentor. ... Mr. Juliano regrets not exercising appropriate judgement and independence during that period."

Juliano ran the Illinois Bush-Cheney campaign. He served in several positions when Ryan was Illinois secretary of state, managing his 1994 election and other political races where Ryan had a stake in the outcome.

FYI that the Judge is slammed today and tomorrow. He will leave the office approx 10:30 am on Friday morning to catch a flight to Texas where he will be all weekend.

Tim is also going to be out of the office all day Thursday and Friday. He will be in the office for a very short while on Monday morning then leaving again and will be out Monday and Tuesday. He returns to the office on Wednesday morning.

My point - if you have something that requires their attention, approval, review, whatever - let us know asap so we can get it in front of them sooner rather than later.

Thanks!

Would it be allowable to have the RNC pay for a user survey of the WH website? The company doing the survey would place a cookie in the WH site that would randomly select a predetermined number of users - those users would be asked if they'd like to participate in a survey on the usability, functionality and content of the WH site - if they say no, they go back to their original WH screen - if they say yes, they'll be transferred to another web site to complete the survey and then will be taken back to the

Bush Plans to Renew Push for Terrorism Insurance Bill Next Week By Rob Wells

c.2002 Bloomberg News

Washington, April 3 (Bloomberg) -- The White House will try again to win passage of terrorism insurance legislation when Congress returns from its spring recess next week, industry lobbyists said.

President George W. Bush will speak Monday about the need to provide incentives for companies to sell affordable insurance against terrorist acts at a White House event featuring labor, business and insurance company executives, said Darren McKinney, spokesman for the National Association of Manufacturers.

Invited guests include the Building and Construction Trades Department of the AFL-CIO, which says the lack of terrorism insurance is stalling real estate projects.

"It's getting to where you just can't build a major construction project," Ray Abernathy, the union's spokesman, said. "The owners and developers are just scared to death of the liability." Abernathy said he couldn't provide an estimate of lost jobs or stalled projects.

Insurance to cover terrorism-related property damage became scarce and expensive after the Sept. 11 attacks, with some companies raised rates as much as 500 percent. The House passed a bill last year to provide government loans to the insurance industry when losses exceed $1 billion. The bill is a priority for insurers such as Hartford Financial Services Group Inc., Chubb Corp., and real estate developers.

Senate Stuck

The Senate failed to act because of a dispute over the Bush administration's request to include a cap on damages in lawsuits resulting from terrorism. Apart from that dispute, Republicans and Democrats should be able to reach an agreement on the bill, industry lobbyists said. "We don't have a major clash on what is 90 percent of this legislation," Joel Wood, senior vice president of government affairs at the Council of Insurance Agents and Brokers, said. In February, the House Financial Services Committee heard from lenders, developers and insurance executives who described problems obtaining insurance for high-profile real estate projects that could become terrorist targets. The president and chief executive officer of Column Financial Inc., a unit of Credit Suisse First Boston, told the committee he's turned down six loans valued at about $300 million because borrowers lacked terrorism insurance.

White House officials declined to discuss Monday's event or preview the president's remarks.

"The administration has been pushing for the Congress to act on terrorism insurance because we believe it's important for there to be a federal backstop," White House spokeswoman Claire Buchan said. The issue "is about jobs, it's about new construction."

Buchan said passage of terrorism insurance "would minimize risk in the event that there were another terrorist attack. If the buildings were insured, there would be less uncertainty." --Rob Wells in the Washington newsroom (202) 624-1933 or rwellsbloomberg.net. Editor: Willen -0- (BN)

Hello. I'm an attorney in OHS' General Counsel's office. I'm wondering if you know whether there are any extant guidance memos on Hatch Act compliance for federal employees? There's a rumor that DoJ did one at some point. If you do, I would love to have a copy.

Mark and Julie -- Just to make sure that we are on the same page, is it correct that if any of the House committee chairman agree to make next week's briefngs by the Governor open to the public and the press, the WH game plan is unchanged -- meaning -- it would be our expectation that Gov. Ridge would be accompanied by either Cabinet officials and/or senior, Senate-confirmed Dept. officials (INS? Customs?) and OMB officials who the Governor could turn to as Members ask questions concerning operational and budgetary issues? I'm assuming there's nothing about the House plans that would change the game plan set forth in Gov. Ridge's letter to Sen. Byrd (about the appearance of other Exec. Branch officials), but please confirm that this understanding is correct. Many thanks -- Ed

Ridge Expected To Propose Merging INS, Customs. The Atlanta Journal-Constitution (4/4, Plummer) reports, &President Bush will receive a multiyear plan for homeland security by July 1, the director of that office said Wednesday. A proposal to combine portions of the Immigration and Naturalization Service with the Customs Service for border security is expected to be part of the recommendations.⁸ The Journal-Constitution reports, &Homeland Security Director Tom Ridge said he will discuss elements of that +strategic blueprint, during open House committee hearings, beginning next week. (Merging some of the more than 40 agencies now responsible for portions of the federal response to terrorism is likely, but Ridge would not specify which agencies are on his list.⁸

Ridge Will & Brief 8 Congress But Won't Be Forced Into Testimony. The Washington Post (4/4, A15, Miller) reports, & Homeland Security Director Tom Ridge, embroiled in controversy recently over his refusal to testify before Congress, said yesterday he will meet informally with two congressional committees and answer questions about the Bush administration's plans to deal with terrorism threats. 8 The Post adds, & The sessions, which Ridge described as +briefings,, will mark the first time he has appeared before congressional committees since taking office six months ago. 8 The Post adds, & From Ridge's standpoint, they signify his willingness to be accessible and accountable. But they failed to end the controversy over whether Congress can compel Ridge to appear under oath. 8

The New York Times (4/4, Becker) reports that & the two sessions, with committees that are Republican-controlled, will be informal, and Congressional aides said that at least the first of them would be held behind closed doors, to ensure that informality. 8 The Times adds, & That will do little to diminish the rift between the White House and the Democratic-controlled Senate over who is responsible for explaining domestic security efforts before Congress. (But with concern that the conflict in the Middle East could pose a threat to civilians in the United States, the demand for Mr. Ridge to testify is growing.

The AP (4/4, Lindlaw) reports, & Ridge said Wednesday he will informally brief members of the House Government Affairs Committee on April 11, and the House Energy and Commerce Committee in the near future. A spokesman for Energy and Commerce said that probably would come this month. 8 The AP reports, & It was not clear Wednesday how Ridge's briefing will differ from formal testimony. (Testimony generally is given in a public hearing, with members of the public and news media present, said Tom Gavin, a spokesman for Byrd. John Droeg did not know whether the April 11 session will be accessible to the public and reporters. 8

By Mark Felsenthal

WASHINGTON, April 3 (Reuters) - President George W. Bush plans to ramp up pressure on Congress to pass legislation providing federal backing for insurance companies in the event of another attack on the United States, industry officials said on Wednesday.

The president is expected to argue at an event next week that failure to pass an insurance backstop bill has led to higher insurance premiums and canceled coverage, hobbling the economy just as it emerges from recession.

"We anticipate they (the White House) will step up their efforts pretty dramatically," said Joe Rubin, director of congressional and public affairs at the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

The White House declined comment on whether Bush would hold an event on Monday on terrorism insurance but said the issue was important to the Bush administration.

"Terrorism insurance is a very important issue and it is one we have been working with Congress and trying to get passed in the wake of Sept. 11," said White House spokeswoman Claire Buchan.

The insurance industry hopes the President's involvement will jump start an issue that lost urgency after some of the dire predictions about insurance problems failed to occur.

"It's just a huge boost to have the president come out and do something public," said Gary Karr, a spokesman for the American Insurance Association.

Insurers have testified to Congress that they could pay claims associated with the Sept. 11 hijack attacks but could not survive a repeat of that event.

Businesses had warned they would become particularly vulnerable to rapid increases in premiums and canceled policies after Jan. 1, when many insurance contracts came up for renewal.

There has been particular concern in the building industry where loans are usually conditioned on possession of insurance.

Congress last year worked on bills that would have required the government to step in after as little as $1 billion in claims, but the measure foundered on partisan differences over liability curbs.

A consumer advocate said the federal backstop by taxpayers is unwarranted because, despite sporadic instances of companies struggle to find or pay for insurance, the private market has largely stepped into the breach.

"Many of the doomsday scenarios predicted since Dec. 31 have not occurred -- for the most part banks are lending; for the most part there hasn't been an economic drag," said Travis Plunkett, legislative director of the Consumer Federation of America.

U.S. Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan told Congress in late February he had seen no evidence up to that point that difficulties in obtaining insurance were hurting the economy.

Give him his day: Miguel Estrada deserves Senate hearing

As one can tell by looking at the people around him, President Bush has a knack for seeking out diversity) without giving up on quality.

That evidently steams Senate Democrats, some of whom covet Mr. Bush's job and think that one way to get it is to portray their party as the only source of opportunity for women and minorities. In their frustration, Democrats apparently are not above taking hostages.

It has been nearly a year since Mr. Bush announced his selection of Miguel Estrada and 10 other nominees to seats on the federal bench. To date, only three of those 11 nominees have been given hearings. They do not include Mr. Estrada, who the president thinks would be the perfect choice to fill an opening on the prestigious U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. The best that Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy could do is to suggest that Miguel Estrada could get his day in Congress some time later this year.

It is easy to see why Democrats are in no hurry to make Mr Estrada's acquaintance. His biography is a bit intimidating. The 40-year-old lawyer was born in Honduras and immigrated to the United States at age 17. He taught himself English, and did such a good job that he graduated Phi Beta Kappa from Columbia University and magna cum laude from Harvard Law School, where he was editor of the law review.

Mr. Estrada then served as a law clerk to Supreme Court Justice Anthony Kennedy before becoming an assistant U.S. attorney and assistant to the U.S. solicitor general in both the Bush and Clinton administrations. He has argued 15 cases before the U.S. Supreme Court) and won 10.

Then there is the allure of making history. If confirmed, Mr. Estrada would be the first Hispanic ever appointed to the circuit court and) perhaps more important) well positioned to become the first Hispanic appointed to the Supreme Court. Breaking either barrier is bound to increase President Bush's popularity with Hispanic voters. And that, understandably, makes some Democrats nervous.

They need to get over it. Every chief executive deserves to have his judicial nominees considered in a timely manner. And, given his life's accomplishments alone, Miguel Estrada deserves better treatment than the United States Senate has given him. The man deserves a hearing. Now.

Insurance

President Bush Expected to Urge

Senate to Act on Terrorism Insurance

The Senate must act to pass terrorism insurance legislation quickly in order to go to conference with the House on the issue or risk jeopardizing the U.S. economy, President Bush is expected to say at a White House event scheduled for April 8, industry and government sources told BNA April 3.

Although Bush's appearance with business leaders representing both large and small business interests has yet to be confirmed by White House staff, sources told BNA that Bush will speak out in an effort to pressure Senate Majority Leader Thomas Daschle (D-S.D.) to bring the matter to the Senate floor.

The issue is "very important" to the president, White House Deputy Press Secretary Claire Buchan told BNA. "The House has passed terrorism insurance legislation. The Senate needs to act now. We want to see the Senate act so that they can get to a conference."

A last-ditch effort to bring terrorism insurance legislation to the Senate floor failed Dec. 20 after Republicans and Democrats could not agree on provisions related to tort reform, particularly limits on punitive damages. The House passed its version of a terrorism insurance bill (H.R. 3210) Nov. 29, but the Senate has yet to take it up formally. The White House has said the tort provisions are essential if Bush is to sign the legislation.

Daschle 'Priority.'

"Senator Daschle has listed it as a priority," a Daschle spokesman told BNA.

"We are trying to find a way to pass it, but we can't seem to make any progress."

Specifically, the representative said tort reform remains a critical blocking point between Democrats and Republicans. Republicans argue that capping punitive damages is necessary to avoid economic fallout in the wake of potential new terrorist attacks, but Democrats argue that the issue should be debated separately.

Before the House passed its version of terrorism insurance legislation, House leaders broadened the measure's tort reform provisions to include a cap on noneconomic damages for the private sector. In the last moments of Senate debate over the bill, Sens. Phil Gramm (R-Texas) and Christopher Dodd (D-Conn.) attempted to scale back these provisions, but their effort to compromise failed. Gramm's and Dodd's proposal would have shielded only the U.S. government from having to absorb costs associated with punitive damages resulting from terrorist acts.

"There has been no progress made to remove comprehensive tort reform from the bill," Daschle's spokesperson said. "We could even support the Dodd-Gramm proposal for limited tort reform."

However, unless the flap over tort reform is dealt with, Democrats are likely to filibuster the legislation, the spokesman said. "This will not pass if comprehensive tort reform is included."

No New Plan in Works

Meanwhile, industry sources told BNA that there is no alternative solution in the works. "There is no new proposal," a major trade group lobbyist told BNA. "There has been no active consideration of this legislation for months."

Since Jan. 1, industry and other interested parties have stepped up their efforts to lobby Congress to pass legislation establishing a federal backstop to cover losses that could result from additional terrorist acts on U.S. soil.

A flurry of reports, including one from the General Accounting Office, have cited the increasing lack of terrorism coverage as dead weight on the economy. In New York City and Washington, D.C., the lack of available affordable coverage is being blamed for higher business expenses and slowed real estate development.

The insurance industry's current inability to assess and price terrorism-related risk is a threat to the U.S. economy, Sheila C. Bair, assistant secretary for financial institutions at the Treasury Department, said in a December speech.

REV_00142532

STATEMENT BY THE PRESS SECRETARY

The President today declared a major disaster exists in the Commonwealth of Kentucky and ordered Federal aid to supplement commonwealth and local recovery efforts in the area struck by severe storms and flooding on March 17-21, 2002.

The President's action makes Federal funding available to affected individuals in Bath, Bell, Bourbon, Boyd, Carter, Clay, Elliott, Fleming, Greenup, Harlan, Knox, Laurel, Lawrence, Letcher, Leslie, Lewis, McCreary, Menifee, Montgomery, Morgan, Nicholas, Perry, Rowan, and Whitley Counties and local governments in Bath, Bell, Boyd, Breathitt, Carter, Clay, Elliot, Fleming, Greenup, Harlan, Johnson, Knott, Knox, Lawrence, Leslie, McCreary, Magoffin, Perry, Rowan, Wayne and Whitley Counties.

Assistance can include disaster housing, grants, low-cost loans to cover uninsured property losses, and other programs to help individuals and business owners recover from the effects of the disaster.

Federal funding also is available to eligible local governments on a cost-sharing basis for the repair or replacement of public facilities damaged by the severe storms and flooding. Federal funding is also available on a cost share basis for hazard mitigation measures.

Joe M. Allbaugh, Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA), named Michael Bolch as the Federal Coordinating Officer for Federal recovery operations in the affected area.

The Agency said that damage surveys are continuing in other areas, and additional counties may be added after the assessments are completed.

The Agency said that residents and business owners who sustained losses in the designated counties can begin applying for assistance tomorrow by calling 1-800-621-FEMA(3362), or 1-800-462-7585 (TTY) for the hearing and speech impaired. The toll-free telephone numbers will operate from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. seven days a week until further notice.

FOR FURTHER INFORMATION CONTACT: FEMA (202) 646-4600.

Bart has asked that in lieu of flowers, we send donations to the Humane Society of Vero Beach. Please let me know if you would like to contribute. If you would like to give cash/checks to me, I can then write one check to cover all of the donations and send it down. Please get money to me by Monday. Thanks.

Subject: STATEMENT BY THE PRESS SECRETARY

THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

April 4, 2002

STATEMENT BY THE PRESS SECRETARY

The President today declared a major disaster exists in the Commonwealth of Kentucky and ordered Federal aid to supplement commonwealth and local recovery efforts in the area struck by severe storms and flooding on March 17-21, 2002.

The President's action makes Federal funding available to affected individuals in Bath, Bell, Bourbon, Boyd, Carter, Clay, Elliott, Fleming, Greenup, Harlan, Knox, Laurel, Lawrence, Letcher, Leslie, Lewis, McCreary, Menifee, Montgomery, Morgan, Nicholas, Perry, Rowan, and Whitley Counties

and local governments in Bath, Bell, Boyd, Breathitt, Carter, Clay, Elliot, Fleming, Greenup, Harlan, Johnson, Knott, Knox, Lawrence, Leslie, McCreary, Magoffin, Perry, Rowan, Wayne and Whitley Counties.

Assistance can include disaster housing, grants, low-cost loans to cover uninsured property losses, and other programs to help individuals and business owners recover from the effects of the disaster.

Federal funding also is available to eligible local governments on a cost-sharing basis for the repair or replacement of public facilities damaged by the severe storms and flooding. Federal funding is also available on a cost share basis for hazard mitigation measures.

Joe M. Allbaugh, Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA), named Michael Bolch as the Federal Coordinating Officer for Federal recovery operations in the affected area.

The Agency said that damage surveys are continuing in other areas, and additional counties may be added after the assessments are completed.

The Agency said that residents and business owners who sustained losses in the designated counties can begin applying for assistance tomorrow by calling 1-800-621-FEMA(3362), or 1-800-462-7585 (TTY) for the hearing and speech impaired. The toll-free telephone numbers will operate from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. seven days a week until further notice.

FOR FURTHER INFORMATION CONTACT: FEMA (202) 646-4600.

Burton is holding a hearing on Thursday afternoon with one panel on "lack of access to Presidential Records"

Apparently there is some conference of historians in town next week - so some of these folks will be witnesses to say how important access is for research - they dont have a witness list yet.

Since Moose is out, I've gotten a couple inquiries re whether people can attend the WH correspondents' dinner - specifically, whether this falls within the widely-attended-gathering exception. I seem to recall that this came up last year and that the answer was yes. Does anyone else remember?

Senate Majority Leader Daschle has no intention of bringing a terrorism insurance bill to the floor next week because no agreements have yet been reached on the measure's tort reform language, a Daschle spokeswoman reiterated today in response to a published report. Proponents of reform continue to insist that a federal insurance program limit the ability of terrorism victims to seek punitive damages against businesses. While saying the federal reinsurance measure remains a priority for Daschle this Congress, the spokeswoman said no agreement has been reached that would clear the measure for action. "We still hope to get this done in the next work period, by Memorial Day," she said, but added: "He will not bring it to the floor until the issue of comprehensive tort reform is resolved. There's very limited time

left in this Congress [and] that would be sure to provoke a very long debate if not a filibuster. It has to be worked out before the floor." Daschle has made some concessions and remains supportive of a reinsurance
measure introduced last year by Sens. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., and Phil Gramm, R-Texas,
she added. Daschle "would even be willing to accept [the bill's] limited tort reforms strictly related to terrorist incidents," she said.

I think we need to establish some kind of nice tradition for sending off lawyers who are leaving (one event for Moose, one event for Courtney, and one event for Rachel). I think these events are nicest when the departee's colleagues host it. Informal happy hours? Organized happy hours, e.g. rent a room at say Old Ebbitt, and e-mail a big list of WH people? The downside to the latter could be cost. Let me know your thoughts. I suppose we could have one combined event for the three of them, although that is not quite as good in my view.

NOTE THAT I DID NOT INCLUDE MOOSE, COURTNEY, AND RACHEL ON THIS E-MAIL.

Viewpoint: Terror,s Economic Impact On Commercial Real Estate

Friday, April 5, 2002
By David E. Creamer

The rebound since Sept. 11 has lulled us into a false sense of security. Many economic effects of the terror attack have yet to be felt. The impact on America, s commercial real estate market is just becoming evident.

Real estate is the heartbeat of the American economy. We are all invested in real estate much more than we realize. Take a look at the balance sheet of any Fortune 500 company and see the real estate exposure shown therein. And balance sheets only show the amortized value * replacement values are often extremely higher. Also, pension funds and insurance companies invest heavily in commercial property.

A crisis is brewing in the commercial real estate industry. While nowhere near as dramatic as the tragedy of Sept. 11, an attack that the commercial property industry faces could have a devastating impact on our economy. And it all relates to terrorism. The question is: Who bears the risk of the next terrorist attack?

Before Sept. 11, the risk of terror strikes was borne by the insurance industry. Covered by all risk policies generally required by lenders, it was ordinary business practice for this risk to be insured. From the insurer's viewpoint, the cost of providing this coverage was not significant. After all, there had only been two major acts of terrorism in the United States. One, the Oklahoma City bombing, was of a federal building that was self-insured by the government. So the only domestic act of terrorism that had resulted in an insurance payout was the 1993 bombing of the World Trade Center.

Since Sept. 11, the insurance industry has withdrawn terrorist coverage from all-risk policies * it is generally not available. Where offered, it is only at exorbitant rates. One insurer recently said it would provide such coverage only in limited face amounts at rates of 5% to 25% of the value of the property as an annual premium!

So who bears the risk of terrorist acts in the wake of Sept. 11? The natural assumption is the property owner. Where the owner is a major corporation, this is generally true. For those headquarters buildings and factories owned and operated by corporations, the owner often bears the risk. But most U.S. commercial real estate is financed on a nonrecourse basis to the owner. In the event of a default by the owner/borrower, the lender's only recourse is to the underlying real estate. This means that in the event the property is destroyed by an act of terror, the lender is left holding the bag.

So why take pity on the lenders? When we think of real estate lenders, we assume they are large, deep-pocketed money center banks. But the fact is banks do not extend most of the commercial property lending in this country. It is average investors that usually provide the capital for this financing. Fixed-income funds. Pension plans. Insurance companies. 401(k) investments. Our rainy-day and retirement funds.

We invest these funds expecting them to be secure, safe investments collateralized by real estate * commercial property insured against destruction. We invest these funds without intending to bear this type of risk. And now that the money is invested, suddenly the rules of the game are changing.

It gets worse. Unlike your home mortgage that is paid off in full when the loan matures, commercial property mortgages usually have a sizable sum outstanding when the loan becomes due. The loan is expected to be repaid out of sale proceeds or a refinancing of the property.

In either case, a new loan is required. The lender's dilemma is straightforward: Do you make a new mortgage without the requirement of insurance for terrorist acts? If lenders do not finance the sale or provide a refinancing, the loan will default upon maturity.

It is here that the true crisis has arisen. The impact is not limited to the commercial real estate industry. Other sectors would feel the effects. The U.S. labor market would be hit hard. The current construction boom could grind to a halt in the big cities and malls. Many construction workers and skilled tradesmen would start to feel the pinch; all the new jobs these projects create would be lost.

The potential impact on our commercial property industry and entire economy is so severe that it is difficult to comprehend. Remember, if the loan goes into default upon maturity for failure to sell or refinance, the lender's only recourse is to recoup on the value of the collateral. But what is the value of the real estate if potential purchasers cannot get financing? The impact on commercial real estate values would be reminiscent of the savings-and-loan crisis of prior decades.

Clearly, everyone hopes that confidence in our nation's security will return to more comfortable levels and that the insurance industry will reasonably price this type of risk. "Let market forces prevail!" is the cry. The problem is that market forces do not always intelligently address a problem before it becomes severe. In fact, the market tends to wait for crises to escalate and opportunities to present themselves.

Our federal government is already poised to take a big hit if matters continue on their present path. If property values plummet and lenders begin to suffer losses, the government stands behind many of these lenders or loans: FDIC-insured lending institutions, PBGC-insured pension plans, HUD-insured multifamily properties and Fannie Mae-and Freddie Mac-owned or -guaranteed loans. The problem is that this would be more like a bailout: shoring up an industry after it has suffered massive losses. The preferred path would be for the government to take less-expensive steps up front to prevent these losses.

The time for action is now. Before property values plummet. Before our retirement assets are depreciated. The government has considered taking steps to provide a stopgap measure to partially insure against losses from terrorist acts. Supported by the White House, the House of Representatives passed a measure addressing this issue, but the Senate failed to support it, allowing a handful of senators to tie up the legislation and bogging down on unrelated issues. Congress must take precautionary measures to prevent an even greater disaster.

The General Accounting Office has recognized the seriousness of the problem, enumerating many instances where the lack of terrorism insurance is having an adverse effect and expressing concern that this could become a drag on our economic recovery. Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan recently observed that Congress should stipulate that the federal government cover this risk. The warning signs are clear. The potential for a severe impact is real. Congress should act now, before the terrorists win their war on the U.S.

economy without making another move.

Senate Majority Leader Daschle has no intention of bringing a terrorism insurance bill to the floor next week because no agreements have yet been reached on the measure's tort reform language, a Daschle spokeswoman reiterated today in response to a published report. Proponents of reform continue to insist that a federal insurance program limit the ability of terrorism victims to seek punitive damages against businesses. While saying the federal reinsurance measure remains a priority for Daschle this Congress, the spokeswoman said no agreement has been reached that would clear the measure for action. "We still hope to get this done in the next work period, by Memorial Day," she said, but added: "He will not bring it to the floor until the issue of comprehensive tort reform is resolved. There's very limited time

that would be sure to provoke a very long debate if not a filibuster. It has to be worked out before the floor." Daschle has made some concessions and remains supportive of a
reinsurance
measure introduced last year by Sens. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., and Phil Gramm, R-Texas,
she added. Daschle "would even be willing to accept [the bill's] limited tort reforms strictly related
to terrorist incidents," she said.

I agree this is a nice thing to do. Libby, one other possible nice thing to do that you might mention to the Judge: I'm pretty sure that when Townsend McNitt left the WH, Nick arranged for the President to receive her in the Oval for a couple minutes to thank her for her service and do a quick photo op. I'm not positive that was done, but if it was, and if ARG thinks this is an ok idea, it might be worth pursuing as another nice adjunct to the farewell ritual.

I think we need to establish some kind of nice tradition for sending off lawyers who are leaving (one event for Moose, one event for Courtney, and one event for Rachel). I think these events are nicest when the departee's colleagues host it. Informal happy hours? Organized happy hours, e.g. rent a room at say Old Ebbitt, and e-mail a big list of WH people? The downside to the latter could be cost. Let me know your thoughts. I suppose we could have one combined event for the three of them, although that is not quite as good in my view.

NOTE THAT I DID NOT INCLUDE MOOSE, COURTNEY, AND RACHEL ON THIS E-MAIL.

Crackdown On Terror Funding Is Questioned (LAT)

Finance: U.S. officials say a lack of evidence and fighting among agencies have hampered the drive.

By JOSH MEYER and ERIC LICHTBLAU

The Los Angeles, April 7, 2002

WASHINGTON -- The U.S. government's much-touted financial war on terrorism has been hamstrung by bitter turf battles among federal agencies, questionable evidence against targeted Middle Eastern groups and a lack of cooperation by foreign allies, senior government officials said.

In recent months, President Bush and his top Cabinet members have hailed the U.S. government's effort to "shut down the money pipeline" as an increasingly important, and successful, component of the broad counter-terrorism strategy in the United States and abroad.

But privately some administration officials are voicing growing concern that the strategy isn't working as advertised.

"You read the papers and it seems like everything is going great," said one senior law enforcement official. "But this is no way to run an investigation. And the worst part is that this is the biggest case in existence. And so much is at stake."

Debate over the problems has occurred at the highest levels, according to interviews with more than a dozen law enforcement, intelligence and counter-terrorism officials familiar with the financial crackdown. Among the concerns:

Infighting between the Justice and Treasury departments has spawned two parallel and often conflicting bureaucracies pursuing financial investigations of suspected terrorists, sending confusing signals to law enforcement and intelligence agencies here and abroad over who is in charge.

Privately, some Treasury and Justice officials blame each other for refusing to work together, withholding information and lacking the required financial training, even as both concede that the current system squanders precious resources, money, time and investigative leads.

At least some of the financial crackdowns on groups with suspected terrorist ties, resulting in the freezing of tens of millions of dollars in assets, were launched prematurely or based on insufficient evidence. The asset seizures have triggered lawsuits from targeted groups, as well as a backlash from Muslims who say they are being unfairly branded as terrorists. Some prosecutors now say they are concerned about whether the seizure cases will hold up in court.

The United States is receiving far less cooperation than it needs from many allied nations, which have pledged to help choke off the terrorist money supply but lack the political will, technical know-how and legal framework to make that happen.

As a result, the financial crackdown risks being little more than a symbolic effort because only a tiny fraction of the money believed to be supporting terrorist activity resides within U.S. financial institutions. Key financial provisions of last year's Patriot Act, which granted authorities broader powers to track suspected terrorist money, are too unwieldy and unrealistic.

The law subjects an array of businesses--from currency transfer and exchange firms to pawnbrokers and even car dealerships--to new auditing and reporting requirements to help authorities detect potential terrorist activity. The legislation gives an April 24 deadline for the new regulations, but many businesses say they have no system for taking on their expanded role as money cops, and authorities complain that they will be overloaded with information.

Leaders of the financial war on terrorism acknowledge the investigations' shortcomings, but they point to success in some areas.

The campaign has been instrumental, for instance, in determining who was behind the Sept. 11 attacks and in establishing connections among the 19 hijackers and other co-conspirators around the world. It also has provided a clearer picture of how Osama bin Laden's Al Qaeda network and other terrorist organizations operate, officials said, adding that the financial component of the war on terrorism ultimately could prove to be instrumental in U.S. efforts to avert another attack.

"Naturally, there are a few growing pains, but I don't detect a systemic problem here," Deputy Treasury Secretary Kenneth Dam said Friday. "No doubt there will be glitches here and there, but that doesn't detract from the point that it's just an incredible joint effort, and it's made a major impact on Al Qaeda and their ability to finance themselves."

Last week, FBI Director Robert Mueller said the crackdown has damaged the ability of Bin Laden and other suspected terrorists to keep their operations going.

Dam, Mueller and other high-ranking leaders say they base those assessments on classified information, intelligence and other indicators that, as Al Qaeda's funding dries up, its cells are withering on the vine. So far, authorities have frozen more than $100 million in alleged terrorist money, about $70 million of it overseas. Several major charities have been targeted for allegedly helping terrorist organizations, as have currency transfer businesses that are popular means of routing money from the United States to Africa and the Middle East.

But others involved in the investigation say they couldn't name any cases in which criminal charges have been brought in the United States directly related to the post-Sept. 11 funding of terrorism.

And some said Al Qaeda's operations are too shrouded in secrecy to gauge the effectiveness of the crackdown, particularly since terrorists frequently use gold, diamonds and other noncurrency transactions to fund their activities.

"I would have no idea [how successful the effort has been], and I have no idea how they would know," one senior law enforcement official said of those who claim Al Qaeda has been financially crippled. Like many others involved in the money-tracking effort, the official declined to be identified by name or even by agency, citing political sensitivities and interagency conflicts.

Agencies Can't Get Together

That official and others said the financial counter-terrorism effort has been faltering on operational and policy levels. Many fear that the problems will only get worse unless something is done to streamline--and de-politicize--the entire initiative.

A bewildering array of law enforcement squads is involved in the financial investigations, not to mention committees set up to oversee them, including a high-level panel so secretive that no one will even disclose its name.

The FBI set up its money-tracking Financial Review Group within days of the attacks and invited other agencies, including Treasury, the CIA and the National Security Council, to join.

Within weeks, however, the Treasury Department created Green Quest, headed by Customs Commissioner Robert C. Bonner, a former U.S. attorney in Los Angeles. It said the multi-agency panel would lead the effort to track terrorist financing.

Bonner and Treasury officials say they were following Bush's Sept. 23 executive order that sought to freeze the U.S.-based assets of individuals and organizations involved with terrorism.

Justice officials counter that the Treasury Department has interpreted its role too broadly and that the FBI, which is part of the Justice Department, is supposed to be leading the global effort to staunch the flow of terrorist funds. The Treasury and Justice departments have opened hundreds of financial investigations independent of each other.

Things have degenerated to the point where the two FBI positions on the customs panel are vacant, and the two customs agents in the FBI unit left and never came back, according to people close to the investigations.

Treasury's Dam and other top officials said the interagency conflicts are minimal and simply the natural outgrowth of forcing two massive law enforcement and intelligence-gathering bureaucracies to work together and share sensitive and often classified information.

But others remain concerned.

"I just find it absurd, especially in light of what we're going through, that the agencies can't put this petty [conflict] behind them," said one law enforcement official.

At a Feb. 12 congressional hearing, Rep. Doug Bereuter (R-Neb.) questioned the "behind-the-scenes tug of war" between Treasury and Justice.

"I am concerned that if parallel financial intelligence databases are set up, the U.S. government will both spend money unnecessarily and decrease investigative and enforcement efficiency," Bereuter said.

FBI officials have confidentially proposed merging the two panels, but the Treasury Department has consistently rejected that idea, sources said.

Treasury Undersecretary for Enforcement Jimmy Gurule says the groups perform important but separate functions. He says the Treasury Department is responsible for the broader financial investigation into terrorism, while the FBI pursues the Sept. 11 investigation and other law enforcement actions.

FBI Request to View Records Is Denied

The two camps are often working at cross-purposes. A few weeks ago, the Treasury Department denied FBI requests to look at financial records that the department seized from a New Jersey charity with suspected terrorist ties. FBI agents had to go to the charity itself to seek permission to see the records.

Matthew Piers, an attorney for the Benevolence International Foundation USA, agreed to the request because, he said, the charity has nothing to hide. Piers said the episode struck him as bizarre and symptomatic of what he described as the flimsy case the Treasury Department has brought against the charity in freezing $800,000 in assets and crippling the organization's relief efforts in Asia and Europe.

He called the Treasury Department's methods draconian and noted that no criminal charges have been filed against the charity or its employees. The Treasury Department alleges that Benevolence's chief executive has ties to radical Islamic fundamentalists.

"They're wrong," Piers said. "It's just plain and simple a case of mistaken identity."

If authorities think the executive has suspected terrorist ties, Piers asked, "why have they not even questioned him? Why haven't they picked him up?"

Treasury officials refuse to discuss the case or details about any of the orders blocking the assets of more than 190 individuals, charities and businesses. The orders are often based on evidence that Treasury officials say is classified and not available to the accused.

On Friday, a federal judge in Chicago supported the use of such evidence when he allowed government attorneys to present their case against another charity, Global Relief Foundation, without its lawyers present. The hearing was part of Global Relief's lawsuit to recover about $1 million in frozen assets.

Dam and Treasury General Counsel David Aufhauser said they are satisfied that there is ample evidence underlying all of the Treasury Department's searches and its orders freezing assets. Aufhauser also said all of the orders were issued after thorough investigations and consultation with the Justice Department.

But others within the administration dispute that. Sources who asked not to be identified said the Justice Department has expressed concerns to senior Treasury officials about the strength of the asset-freezing cases, as well as the lack of coordination.

Some officials fear that any evidentiary weakness will become an embarrassment when organizations whose assets are frozen bring cases in court here and overseas--and the Justice Department has to defend the government's position.

"There are going to be huge problems," one law enforcement official said. In many of the cases, "I don't think there's a lot there. . . . It's pretty thin."

An official at a separate agency said that, although there may be legitimate reasons to target many of these groups, he believes the Treasury Department's rush to take action last fall may have been "politically driven" and premature. "They were running and gunning," the official said.

Treasury officials disputed the charge. "The last thing we want to engage in is political theater," Aufhauser said.

In fact, the Treasury Department has had complaints of its own: Officials say the FBI repeatedly hampered cooperation. For example, when it requested intelligence information from the FBI last fall to prepare orders for freezing assets, some of those requests were never acted on, officials said. Only when higher-ups intervened did the Treasury Department get the requested information.

A Parade of Official Visits to U.S. Allies

Several senior law enforcement officials complained that the tug of war extends overseas as well.

As evidence that U.S. allies are getting mixed messages about the U.S. operation, they cited the separate trips to Europe and Asia by Atty. Gen. John Ashcroft, FBI Director Mueller, Treasury Secretary Paul H. O'Neill and other top-level officials to talk up the financial war on terrorism. The Treasury and Justice departments also have been quietly sending employees overseas to press U.S. allies into doing more to help in the financial crackdown. Those include legal experts who are trying to help the countries establish the legal frameworks needed to follow through on any seizures. And technical consultants are working with those governments and private banks to set up the appropriate computer systems, officials said.

Other nations "are asking for additional proof" of wrongdoing by suspected terrorists, charities and other businesses before acting, Aufhauser said. One of those countries is Switzerland. On a recent trip to Washington, Switzerland's attorney general, Valentin Roschacher, complained that U.S. officials told him to freeze the assets of several suspected terrorist organizations but then said they couldn't hand over the underlying evidence because it is classified.

U.S. officials also said some of their allies, including some suspected of having a major terrorist presence, such as Saudi Arabia, Pakistan and the United Arab Emirates, are dragging their feet for fear of a backlash from their Muslim populations.

Amid all the logistical problems, an even more troubling question has begun to emerge: How much good can tracking terrorist money really do? Everyone agrees that financial investigations are critically important in uncovering, and even thwarting, terrorist activity. Credit card, phone and travel records and other forms of payment can be used to identify those involved in a conspiracy, to establish links between them and other co-conspirators and to gather evidence.

But much of the current focus appears to be on examining the entire universe of financial transactions for signs of terrorist activity, which many investigators liken to searching for a needle in a haystack the size of Nebraska.

Authorities note that the 19 hijackers were able to carry out the Sept. 11 attacks on a budget of about $500,000, without any of their financial transactions triggering red flags.

"This was the Super Bowl of terrorist acts, and even in retrospect, knowing what we do now, we would never have caught that," one law enforcement official said.

Oliver "Buck" Revell, a former top FBI official and counter-terrorism expert, was equally skeptical that monitoring the flow of money will prevent another terrorist attack: "I think you need to do it, but it's not going to stop them."

The preliminary draft of the GAO report claims that the former occupant of Moose's old office says that a bookshelf covered the doors (which later were found to have no doorknobs) until he left at 11 a.m. on January 20, and thus he doesn't know if there were ever doorknobs there. Does anyone recall there being any bookshelves in front of those doors? Also, did any of you go in our offices on Sunday, January 21?

Hey - one more thing.

I had the following people down as attending tomorrow's meeting - Lott, Kyl, McConnell, Nickles, Kyl.

Will change it to reflect:
Judge
Ashcroft
Hatch
McConnell
Lott

Seems like this will be a meeting in which the participants are forever changing. Please do keep me posted on participants so the Judge knows who to expect.

And one more question- who else from the WH will be going to these meetings? Any of our lawyers? What about Z and/or Heather?

Thanks!

The preliminary draft of the GAO report claims that the former occupant of Moose's old office says that a bookshelf covered the doors (which later were found to have no doorknobs) until he left at 11 a.m. on January 20, and thus he doesn't know if there were ever doorknobs there. Does anyone recall there being any bookshelves in front of those doors? Also, did any of you go in our offices on Sunday, January 21?

They do not need to be retained. One caveat: If the notes concern a subject under investigation, they should be retained.

Good morning! Just want to double check a point regarding personal notes. If one takes personal notes at a meeting or jots down action items that need to be taken care of -- in both cases for personal use only -- do they have to be retained?

Many thanks!

Hey - one more thing.

I had the following people down as attending tomorrow's meeting - Lott, Kyl, McConnell, Nickles, Kyl.

Will change it to reflect:
Judge
Ashcroft
Hatch
McConnell
Lott

Seems like this will be a meeting in which the participants are forever changing. Please do keep me posted on participants so the Judge knows who to expect.

And one more question- who else from the WH will be going to these meetings? Any of our lawyers? What about Z and/or Heather?

Thanks!

Brett,
I initially responded that I had access to the Holy Land information, but as I review the Email that I received, I note that the Email containing information was sent to me at 7:21 a.m. on December 4. I believe the initial inquiry asked whether I had access before December 4. I have received your letter with the questionnaire--do I need to complete it? Do I need to complete a new form to replace the previous one I submitted. Please let me know. Thanks, Brooks Bash x69466.

Subject: 4:30 Tuesday

Gentlemen,

CSE is bringing into town tonight a group of 20 citizen lobbyists who are meeting with targetted Senators on the Hill about Judicial Nominations.

We would like to provide an update to them and host them here in the White House for a meeting.

Date: Tuesday, April 9, 2002
Time: 4:30 p.m.
Location: Room 180

Are either of you available?

Thanks.

Matt

Lack of Terrorism Insurance Coverage: A National Problem Requiring a National Solution

The President today drew attention to the economic ramifications of the lack of adequate commercial property and casualty insurance for terrorism risk. The economic consequences are widespread, affecting all parts of the country and many industries, non-profit organizations, and municipalities. While many entities are reluctant to publicly discuss the difficulties they have had in securing insurance coverage for terrorism risk, some have stepped forward. The following examples demonstrate the national scope and diversity of the problem.

Prior to January 1st 2002, Gwinnett County, GA, in Atlanta's metropolitan area paid approximately $349,000 for $1.8 billion of property-casualty insurance, including $300 million of terrorism coverage. At renewal, Gwinnett secured only $500 million in property-casualty insurance for the county's jail, police headquarters, sewage treatment plants, government center, and other municipal buildings from its primary carrier, and only $1 million of terrorism insurance coverage. Additionally, the county's premiums climbed to $502,000 per year. Gwinnett County then went out and purchased a $50 million terrorism insurance policy from Lloyds of London for $390,000.

After discussions with over 40 different insurance companies for general liability coverage, the U.S. Olympic Committee (USOC) received quotes from only two companies just days before the Salt Lake City Games were to begin. Both quotes excluded terrorism coverage. The day before the Olympic Winter Games began, the USOC secured a minimal amount of terrorism risk coverage – 5 percent of its expiring general liability limit, for the full price of the broader coverage – a 20-fold increase in cost per dollar of coverage. The USOC is currently negotiating a policy for 3 U.S. Olympic training sites, for an April 16 renewal. So far, it has received 5 quotes for insurance coverage, but none of them includes terrorism coverage.

Terrorism insurance coverage for the Mall of America was finally re-obtained in late March. For the real estate company, which owns the Mall and many other trophy properties, certain coverage limits are now 1/100th of what they were prior to January 1st. At times terrorism coverage costs more than 10 times what all risk coverage had cost prior to January 1st. The company is prohibited from revealing the exact price terms.

The LeFrak Organization, owner of a new large office building in Jersey City, New Jersey, experienced difficulty obtaining mortgage financing because of the high cost of terror coverage. Self-insurance was not an option since all of LeFrak's lenders, including the securitization market, required terrorism insurance. After an extensive search, LeFrak was able to obtain terrorism coverage. But this came at a substantially higher cost – $400,000 for standard property-casualty coverage and another $400,000 for terrorism insurance. Prior to 9/11, the entire cost of the coverage for this building, including terrorism coverage, was $60,000.

The Golden Gate Bridge in San Francisco has lost its terrorism risk coverage. For its non-terrorism coverage, premiums recently rose from $500,000 to $1.1 million and coverage was reduced from $125 million to $25 million. The Golden Gate Bridge District's CFO is contemplating toll increases to pay for the premium hikes.

The United Jewish Appeal-Federation of Jewish Philanthropies of New York sponsors hospitals, major medical teaching centers, nursing homes, and many other facilities throughout New York State. None of these institutions has been able to obtain terrorism risk insurance.

The Newark Museum's fine arts insurance premium recently doubled, increasing from $21,000 to $42,500. According to the Museum's insurance agent, this increase was primarily due to concerns about potential terrorism, exacerbated by the institution's proximity to New York City.

The Hyatt Corporation has purchased a site for a new office building in downtown Chicago at a cost of roughly $400 million. The company is now trying to obtain financing for this project but is being told that nobody will make loans without insurance for terrorism, yet adequate terrorism insurance is unavailable. As a result, construction on the project has not been able to begin. The project will lead to the creation of 2500 jobs -- if the Hyatt Corporation can get insurance and proceed with the project.

Amtrak was unable to obtain terrorism coverage when its $500 million property insurance policy came up for renewal on December 1st. Terrorism coverage of that magnitude was not available, and the amount of terrorism coverage that was available was priced so high that it was beyond consideration. Amtrak believes that only limited amounts of terrorism coverage are available today, and that limited coverage is at extremely high rates.

Major hotel companies, including such well-known brands as Embassy Suites, Hilton, Holiday Inn, Hyatt, Marriott, Sheraton, Westin and others, have lost or will soon lose within the next 60 days terrorism coverage under their property insurance programs. These companies are finding that whatever replacement terrorism insurance coverage is available is inadequate to meet their insurance needs. These companies employ millions of Americans, including people working in the hotels, building the hotels and all the other indirect jobs that are required to support hotel properties.

The Cleveland Municipal School District has been notified that there will be an exclusion for terrorist risk when its policy comes up for renewal in July. The School District is concerned that not only will it be losing coverage for terrorism risk, but that the language of the exclusion is written very broadly.

The Wisconsin Energy Corporation has been informed by its insurer that coverage will no longer be available for acts of terrorism when its policy comes up for renewal in July. In seeking to fill this void, the company has found only very limited, and extremely expensive, coverage available from other insurance companies. With this limited coverage, the company's non-nuclear power plants would be grossly underinsured for the potential risk.

In a recent insurance renewal, Baylor University was able to get only half the coverage for twice the price, and its terrorism risk coverage was even more limited. Last year, Baylor's coverage was $1 billion, including terrorism coverage, for a $500,000 premium. This year, they have several separate policies totaling $600 million in coverage, and the premium has risen to $1 million. The terrorism coverage is only $60 million.

The State of Florida is requiring all insurance policies for homeowners and small businesses to include terror coverage. But the availability of such insurance is in jeopardy because the insurance companies cannot obtain reinsurance on coastal commercial properties in Florida.

A prominent Las Vegas developer has been unable to obtain financing for a $2 billion project due to lack of insurance; once financing is obtained, the project will provide 16,000 jobs.

The National Football League and individual teams and stadiums have experienced difficulty acquiring terrorism coverage. The Miami Dolphins and New York Giants have joined the ranks of other teams around the country that have lost terrorism coverage in the wake of the 9/11 attacks. Many teams and stadiums are faced with the choice of going "bare" or paying the exorbitant prices being charged by insurers for minimal coverage.

The President today drew attention to the economic ramifications of the lack of adequate commercial property and casualty insurance for terrorism risk. The economic consequences are widespread, affecting all parts of the country and many industries, non-profit organizations, and municipalities. While many entities are reluctant to publicly discuss the difficulties they have had in securing insurance coverage for terrorism risk, some have stepped forward. The following examples demonstrate the national scope and diversity of the problem.

Prior to January 1st 2002, Gwinnett County, GA, in Atlanta's metropolitan area paid approximately $349,000 for $1.8 billion of property-casualty insurance, including $300 million of terrorism coverage. At renewal, Gwinnett secured only $500 million in property-casualty insurance for the county's jail, police headquarters, sewage treatment plants, government center, and other municipal buildings from its primary carrier, and only $1 million of terrorism insurance coverage. Additionally, the county's premiums climbed to $502,000 per year. Gwinnett County then went out and purchased a $50 million terrorism insurance policy from Lloyds of London for $390,000.

After discussions with over 40 different insurance companies for general liability coverage, the U.S. Olympic Committee (USOC) received quotes from only two companies just days before the Salt Lake City Games were to begin. Both quotes excluded terrorism coverage. The day before the Olympic Winter Games began, the USOC secured a minimal amount of terrorism risk coverage – 5 percent of its expiring general liability limit, for the full price of the broader coverage – a 20-fold increase in cost per dollar of coverage. The USOC is currently negotiating a policy for 3 U.S. Olympic training sites, for an April 16 renewal. So far, it has received 5 quotes for insurance coverage, but none of them includes terrorism coverage.

Terrorism insurance coverage for the Mall of America was finally re-obtained in late March. For the real estate company, which owns the Mall and many other trophy properties, certain coverage limits are now 1/100th of what they were prior to January 1st. At times terrorism coverage costs more than 10 times what all risk coverage had cost prior to January 1st. The company is prohibited from revealing the exact price terms.

The LeFrak Organization, owner of a new large office building in Jersey City, New Jersey, experienced difficulty obtaining mortgage financing because of the high cost of terror coverage. Self-insurance was not an option since all of LeFrak's lenders, including the securitization market, required terrorism insurance. After an extensive search, LeFrak was able to obtain terrorism coverage. But this came at a substantially higher cost – $400,000 for standard property-casualty coverage and another $400,000 for terrorism insurance. Prior to 9/11, the entire cost of the coverage for this building, including terrorism coverage, was $60,000.

The Golden Gate Bridge in San Francisco has lost its terrorism risk coverage. For its non-terrorism coverage, premiums recently rose from $500,000 to $1.1 million and coverage was reduced from $125 million to $25 million. The Golden Gate Bridge District's CFO is contemplating toll increases to pay for the premium hikes.

The United Jewish Appeal-Federation of Jewish Philanthropies of New York sponsors hospitals, major medical teaching centers, nursing homes, and many other facilities throughout New York State. None of these institutions has been able to obtain terrorism risk insurance.

The Newark Museum's fine arts insurance premium recently doubled, increasing from $21,000 to $42,500. According to the Museum's insurance agent, this increase was primarily due to concerns about potential terrorism, exacerbated by the institution's proximity to New York City.

The Hyatt Corporation has purchased a site for a new office building in downtown Chicago at a cost of roughly $400 million. The company is now trying to obtain financing for this project but is being told that nobody will make loans without insurance for terrorism, yet adequate terrorism insurance is unavailable. As a result, construction on the project has not been able to begin. The project will lead to the creation of 2500 jobs -- if the Hyatt Corporation can get insurance and proceed with the project.

Amtrak was unable to obtain terrorism coverage when its $500 million property insurance policy came up for renewal on December 1st. Terrorism coverage of that magnitude was not available, and the amount of terrorism coverage that was available was priced so high that it was beyond consideration. Amtrak believes that only limited amounts of terrorism coverage are available today, and that limited coverage is at extremely high rates.

Major hotel companies, including such well-known brands as Embassy Suites, Hilton, Holiday Inn, Hyatt, Marriott, Sheraton, Westin and others, have lost or will soon lose within the next 60 days terrorism coverage under their property insurance programs. These companies are finding that whatever replacement terrorism insurance coverage is available is inadequate to meet their insurance needs. These companies employ millions of Americans, including people working in the hotels, building the hotels and all the other indirect jobs that are required to support hotel properties.

The Cleveland Municipal School District has been notified that there will be an exclusion for terrorist risk when its policy comes up for renewal in July. The School District is concerned that not only will it be losing coverage for terrorism risk, but that the language of the exclusion is written very broadly.

The Wisconsin Energy Corporation has been informed by its insurer that coverage will no longer be available for acts of terrorism when its policy comes up for renewal in July. In seeking to fill this void, the company has found only very limited, and extremely expensive, coverage available from other insurance companies. With this limited coverage, the company's non-nuclear power plants would be grossly underinsured for the potential risk.

In a recent insurance renewal, Baylor University was able to get only half the coverage for twice the price, and its terrorism risk coverage was even more limited. Last year, Baylor's coverage was $1 billion, including terrorism coverage, for a $500,000 premium. This year, they have several separate policies totaling $600 million in coverage, and the premium has risen to $1 million. The terrorism coverage is only $60 million.

The State of Florida is requiring all insurance policies for homeowners and small businesses to include terror coverage. But the availability of such insurance is in jeopardy because the insurance companies cannot obtain reinsurance on coastal commercial properties in Florida.

A prominent Las Vegas developer has been unable to obtain financing for a $2 billion project due to lack of insurance; once financing is obtained, the project will provide 16,000 jobs.

The National Football League and individual teams and stadiums have experienced difficulty acquiring terrorism coverage. The Miami Dolphins and New York Giants have joined the ranks of other teams around the country that have lost terrorism coverage in the wake of the 9/11 attacks. Many teams and stadiums are faced with the choice of going "bare" or paying the exorbitant prices being charged by insurers for minimal coverage.

As it turns out, 3:00pm does not entirely work for everyone and because Viet wants to ensure that everyone is able to discuss the remaining issues, he has changed his schedule and moved a 4:00pm meeting. So, can everyone make it for a conference call at 4:00pm on Tuesday, April 9?

GW was pretty vocal on this issue today! I recall the WH supported the Gramm measure in December (even though it didn't have everything you asked for), can you guys keep me in the loop if there is anything in the works to negotiate with Daschle? or if there is any new SAP or press release from the WH? My boss has been getting alot of input from the state and he is considering whether to cosponsor Gramm. Your input is helpful in his determination. my direct dial is 224-7986 or you can email me. Thanks guys!

As Bush Urges Action, Senate Skirmishes On Terror Coverage

Declaring the economy itself may be in the balance, President

Bush demanded immediate

Senate action Monday on legislation to provide federal terrorism insurance guarantees. Democrats said late Monday they had attempted to do just that, but were thwarted by members of the president's party. Democratic aides said their party had tried to move a bill offered by Sens. Christopher Dodd,

D-Conn., and Phil Gramm, R-Texas, but were blocked by Republicans.

A spokeswoman for Senate Majority Leader Daschle said Majority

Whip Reid, with Daschle's

support, had sought unanimous consent for the legislation, but Minority

Whip Nickles had objected.

Neither Nickles nor Senate Minority Leader Lott's office was available for comment. An administration official said the White House, as it has in the past, supports the

Dodd-Gramm bill, including modifications

proposed late last year by Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y. "The White House likes to take potshots at us

for stonewalling, but it's the Republican side that is not moving this legislation," said one senior Senate Democratic aide.

The Senate legislation includes narrower liability protections for businesses than were written into companion legislation passed by the House. The administration official indicated that although the White House is not satisfied with the extent of the liability protections being discussed as part of the Senate legislation, it could live with them to get the bill to conference, where changes would be made. "We've shown tremendous flexibility," the official said.

On Friday, Daschle's office had declared he would not bring the bill to the floor this week because of the absence of an agreement on tort reform language. Instead, Daschle had predicted the measure would pass by Memorial Day. "He will not bring it to the floor until the issue of comprehensive tort reform is resolved," Daschle's spokeswoman said at the time.

Bush said he believed the Dodd-Grumm bill would pass if it made it to the floor. Although the issue is a major concern in the business community, Bush's carefully staged White House appearance looked like a union rally.

Introduced by AFL-CIO Building and Construction Trades Department President Ed Sullivan, the president was flanked on stage by construction workers wearing hardhats. On hand in the audience was Teamsters' President James Hoffa.

In calling for action, Bush touched on several hot-button issues, saying a federal backstop for terrorism insurance was needed to create jobs, safeguard the economy and preserve pensions.

"It would make it really hard for our economy to recover a second time if there's an attack without adequate terrorism insurance," Bush said.

The president asserted that because companies are having trouble getting insurance, "new construction is dropping dramatically." Bush said nonresidential construction is down 3 percent compared to January of this year and 17 percent compared to February 2001.

Pension funds that hold real estate assets "may experience lower rates of return because of higher terrorism insurance costs," Bush said. Hoffa indicated after the event that he does not object to attaching some kind of liability limits to the legislation. "I believe that people should have their redress in courts, but I do believe that there are certain catastrophes that speak for themselves--that it's just not a liability thing," he said. Hoffa said he has not talked to Daschle about the issue, but he plans to do so.

Reacting to Bush's presentation on the issue, consumer advocates called on him to drop his support for legislation that would "give away" insurance in the event of future terrorism attacks and work instead to spur the creation of private alternatives.

"In an attempt to justify taxpayer assistance for insurers, the president is overlooking a lot of good news in the market," said Travis Plunkett of the Consumer Federation of America. "There is plenty of evidence that a dynamic market for terror insurance is developing." Meanwhile, American Insurance Industry President Robert Vagley said U.S. insurers "stand solidly" with the president in urging the Senate to finish the task of creating a federal terrorism insurance backstop.

"Such a mechanism would provide critical financial security to public and private entities of all kinds and sizes ... and to the workers who fuel much of our nation's economy," said Vagley. Keith Koffler, with

Bush Says Shortage of Terrorism Insurance Affecting Economy

Bush Says Shortage of Terrorism Insurance Affecting Economy

Washington, April 8 (Bloomberg) -- President George W. Bush said the U.S. economy is being hurt by a shortage of terrorism insurance for businesses, and he urged the Senate to break a deadlock over providing a federal backstop for insurers. Flanked by hard-hat wearing union workers, Bush told an audience of about 125 business executives the shortfall of terrorism coverage since Sept. 11 is making it difficult for companies such as Hyatt Corp. to finance construction projects. ``It's a jobs issue,''' Bush said. ``If they don't build a project, then somebody is not going to be working.''' Terrorism insurance has become scarce and expensive since the attacks in the U.S. About 70 percent of policies covering damage claims from terrorist acts expired on Jan. 1; witnesses at a February House hearing said premiums, if the insurance is available, increased from 58 percent to 280 percent. Bush said a shortage of terrorism coverage contributed to the 3 percent decline in nonresidential construction since January

2002 and a 17 percent decline since February 2001.

``Washington must deal with it, and deal with it in a hurry, because the pace of new construction is dropping dramatically in America,'' he said.

The Republican-controlled House passed a bill last year that would provide loans to the insurance industry to cover losses from terrorist attacks. Bush is backing legislation that would have the U.S. government pay 90 percent of terrorism-related claims of more than $10 billion, with a ceiling at $100 billion.

Senate Democrats have held up action on the measure because Bush wants to include limits on lawsuits resulting from terrorist attacks.

Business and Labor

Bush presented a united front of business and labor leaders calling on the Senate to act. Those joining Bush at the Old Executive Office Building event included J. Willard Marriott Jr., chairman and chief executive officer of the Marriott hotel chain; Nelson C. Rising, chairman and chief executive of Catellus Development Corp., a real estate concern; and David Creamer, chairman of GMAC Commercial Mortgage Corp.

James P. Hoffa Jr., president of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, and Edward Sullivan, president of the Construction Trades Department, AFL-CIO, also attended. White House economic adviser Lawrence Lindsey and Office of Homeland Security Director Tom Ridge were on hand as well.

Sullivan said afterward that ``tens of thousands'' of union construction jobs are in limbo because a lack of insurance is halting construction projects.

``We have a lot of jobs ready to go and the financial people can't loan the money because they can't get terrorist insurance,'' Sullivan said.

Projects Held Up

Marriott said his company has $6 billion in hotel construction projects ready to go in the next year, which could employ between 25,000 to 30,000 people.

``Many of these hotels may not be able to get financed unless there is some terrorist insurance passed,'' Marriott said.

Government agencies are affected as well. The New York Metropolitan Transportation Authority in New York City, for example, has $150 million in terrorism coverage for tunnels, subways and bridges worth more than $1.5 billion, White House spokesman Ari Fleischer said.

Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle said Republicans were using the bill to push forward Bush's longstanding proposal to limit damages in civil suits. Lawyers and law firms, many of whom oppose such limits, contributed about $78 million to Democratic candidates in the 2000 elections, 69 percent of their political donations, according to the Center for Responsive Politics.

`Room for Agreement'

Daschle spokeswoman Molly Rowley said there's been no agreement reached to bring the bill to the Senate floor. ``What will not pass and cannot pass in the Senate is comprehensive tort reform,'' she said. Daschle is open to negotiating on the liability issues and would support ``limited reforms that are strictly limited to terrorism incidents,'' she said.

The Bush administration and lobbyists viewed this as a sign of flexibility. Sheila Bair, assistant Treasury Secretary for financial markets, said in an interview Friday that while ``the devil's in the details,'' the Daschle position shows ``there's room for agreement.''

Opponents say they are skeptical of White House claims that building projects and jobs hang in the balance.

``There just isn't any evidence that the insurance problems are so significant that taxpayers need to be on the hook for future losses,'' said Travis Plunkett, a lobbyist for the Consumer Federation of America. The group said companies are finding terrorism insurance, albeit at a high price and with reduced coverage.

``Little by little, the insurance industry is figuring out creative ways to cover terror insurance,'' he said.

In Tattered Cover, Inc. v. City of Thornton, No. 01SA205 (Colorado, April 8, 2002), mentioned in this morning's Washington Post, the case involved a police investigation of a trailer in Thornton, Colorado that police and the DEA suspected was home to a methamphetamine lab. During a trash cover at the trailer site, the police found a mailing envelope from Tattered Cover, Inc. (a local bookstore) to a named suspect who lived in the trailer that had the invoice number, order number, and customer number. The next day (based on other information) the police executed a search warrant at the trailer, found a meth lab in it and some meth, and various other things, including two new-in-appearance books entitled "Advanced Techniques of Clandestine Psychedelic and Amphetamine Manufacture" and "The Construction and Operation of Clandestine Drug Laboratories." Hoping to connect the suspect named on the bookstore mailing envelope to the two books and hence to the meth lab and meth, the police obtained from a local judge a search warrant for the bookstore for information related to the transaction itemized on the mailing envelope and for any other transaction involving the suspect in the 30-day period preceding the trailer search. When the police went to execute the warrant, the bookstore's attorney contacted the Denver District Attorney's office, which persuaded the police not to execute the warrant until the bookstore could litigate the validity of the warrant.

The Colorado Constitution states: "No law shall be passed impairing the freedom of speech; every person shall be free to speak, write or publish whatever he will on any subject, being responsible for all abuse of that liberty; and in all suits and prosecutions for libel the truth thereof may be given in evidence, and the jury, under the direction of the court, shall determine the law and the fact. "

The Colorado Supreme Court held:

"We hold that the Colorado Constitution requires that the innocent bookseller be afforded an opportunity for an adversarial hearing prior to execution of a search warrant seeking customer purchase records. At that hearing, the court must apply a balancing test to determine whether the law enforcement need for the search warrant outweighs the harm to constitutional interests caused by its execution. In order for law enforcement officials to prevail, they must demonstrate a compelling governmental need for the specific customer purchase records that they seek. When conducting that balancing test, the court may consider whether there are reasonable alternative methods of meeting the government's asserted need, whether the search warrant is unduly broad, and whether law enforcement officials seek the purchase records for reasons related to the content of the books bought by any particular customer."

Applying the test to the facts of the particular case, the Court stated:

". . . [w]e conclude that the City has failed to demonstrate that its need for the Tattered Cover's customer purchase record is sufficiently compelling to outweigh the harm that would be caused to constitutional interests if the search warrant were executed."

The opinion is available on the Colorado Supreme Court website at <http://www.courts.state.co.us/supct/supctcas02.htm>.

Declaring the economy itself may be in the balance, President

Bush demanded immediate

Senate action Monday on legislation to provide federal terrorism insurance guarantees. Democrats

said late Monday they had attempted to do just that, but were thwarted by members of the president's party. Democratic aides said their party had tried to move a bill offered by Sens. Christopher Dodd,

D-Conn., and Phil Gramm, R-Texas, but were blocked by Republicans.

A spokeswoman for Senate Majority Leader Daschle said Majority

Whip Reid, with Daschle's

support, had sought unanimous consent for the legislation, but Minority

Whip Nickles had objected.

Neither Nickles nor Senate Minority Leader Lott's office was available for comment. An administration official said the White House, as it has in the past, supports the

Dodd-Gramm bill, including modifications

proposed late last year by Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y. "The White House

likes to take potshots at us

for stonewalling, but it's the Republican side that is not moving this legislation," said one senior Senate Democratic aide.

The Senate legislation includes narrower liability protections for businesses than were written into companion legislation passed by the House. The administration official indicated that although the White House is not satisfied with the extent of the liability protections being discussed as part of the Senate legislation, it could live with them to get the bill to conference, where changes would be made. "We've shown tremendous flexibility," the official said.

On Friday, Daschle's office had declared he would not bring the bill to the floor this week because of the absence of an agreement on tort reform language. Instead, Daschle had predicted the measure would pass by Memorial Day. "He will not bring it to the floor until the issue of comprehensive tort reform is resolved," Daschle's spokeswoman said at the time.

Bush said he believed the Dodd-Grumm bill would pass if it made it to the floor. Although the issue is a major concern in the business community, Bush's carefully staged White House appearance looked like a union rally.

Introduced by AFL-CIO Building and Construction Trades Department President Ed Sullivan, the president was flanked on stage by construction workers wearing hardhats. On hand in the audience was Teamsters' President James Hoffa.

In calling for action, Bush touched on several hot-button issues, saying a federal backstop for terrorism insurance was needed to create jobs, safeguard the economy and preserve pensions.

"It would make it really hard for our economy to recover a second time if there's an attack without adequate terrorism insurance," Bush said.

The president asserted that because companies are having trouble getting insurance, "new construction is dropping dramatically." Bush said nonresidential construction is down 3 percent compared to January of this year and 17 percent compared to February 2001.

Pension funds that hold real estate assets "may experience lower rates of return because of higher terrorism insurance costs," Bush said. Hoffa indicated after the event that he does not object to attaching some kind of liability limits to the legislation. "I believe that people should have their redress in courts, but I do believe that there are certain catastrophes that speak for themselves--that it's just not a liability thing," he said. Hoffa said he has not talked to Daschle about the issue, but he plans to do so.

Reacting to Bush's presentation on the issue, consumer advocates called on him to drop his support for legislation that would "give away" insurance in the event of future terrorism attacks and work instead to spur the creation of private alternatives.

"In an attempt to justify taxpayer assistance for insurers, the president is overlooking a lot of good news in the market," said Travis Plunkett of the Consumer Federation of America. "There is plenty of evidence that a dynamic market for terror insurance is developing." Meanwhile, American Insurance Industry President Robert Vagley said U.S. insurers "stand solidly" with the president in urging the Senate to finish the task of creating a federal terrorism insurance backstop.

"Such a mechanism would provide critical financial security to public and private entities of all kinds and sizes ... and to the workers who fuel much of our nation's economy," said Vagley. Keith Koffler, with

Bush Says Shortage of Terrorism Insurance Affecting Economy

Washington, April 8 (Bloomberg) -- President George W. Bush said the U.S. economy is being hurt by a shortage of terrorism insurance for businesses, and he urged the Senate to break a deadlock over providing a federal backstop for insurers. Flanked by hard-hat wearing union workers, Bush told an audience of about 125 business executives the shortfall of terrorism coverage since Sept. 11 is making it difficult for companies such as Hyatt Corp. to finance construction projects. ``It's a jobs issue,''' Bush said. ``If they don't build a project, then somebody is not going to be working.''' Terrorism insurance has become scarce and expensive since the attacks in the U.S. About 70 percent of policies covering damage claims from terrorist acts expired on Jan. 1; witnesses at a February House hearing said premiums, if the insurance is available, increased from 58 percent to 280 percent. Bush said a shortage of terrorism coverage contributed to the 3 percent decline in nonresidential construction since January

2002 and a 17 percent decline since February 2001.

``Washington must deal with it, and deal with it in a hurry, because the pace of new construction is dropping dramatically in America,'' he said.

The Republican-controlled House passed a bill last year that would provide loans to the insurance industry to cover losses from terrorist attacks. Bush is backing legislation that would have the U.S. government pay 90 percent of terrorism-related claims of more than $10 billion, with a ceiling at $100 billion.

Senate Democrats have held up action on the measure because Bush wants to include limits on lawsuits resulting from terrorist attacks.

Business and Labor

Bush presented a united front of business and labor leaders calling on the Senate to act. Those joining Bush at the Old Executive Office Building event included J. Willard Marriott Jr., chairman and chief executive officer of the Marriott hotel chain; Nelson C. Rising, chairman and chief executive of Catellus Development Corp., a real estate concern; and David Creamer, chairman of GMAC Commercial Mortgage Corp.

James P. Hoffa Jr., president of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, and Edward Sullivan, president of the Construction Trades Department, AFL-CIO, also attended. White House economic adviser Lawrence Lindsey and Office of Homeland Security Director Tom Ridge were on hand as well.

Sullivan said afterward that ``tens of thousands'' of union construction jobs are in limbo because a lack of insurance is halting construction projects.

``We have a lot of jobs ready to go and the financial people can't loan the money because they can't get terrorist insurance,'' Sullivan said.

Projects Held Up

Marriott said his company has $6 billion in hotel construction projects ready to go in the next year, which could employ between 25,000 to 30,000 people.

``Many of these hotels may not be able to get financed unless there is some terrorist insurance passed,'' Marriott said.

Government agencies are affected as well. The New York Metropolitan Transportation Authority in New York City, for example, has $150 million in terrorism coverage for tunnels, subways and bridges worth more than $1.5 billion, White House spokesman Ari Fleischer said.

Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle said Republicans were using the bill to push forward Bush's longstanding proposal to limit damages in civil suits. Lawyers and law firms, many of whom oppose such limits, contributed about $78 million to Democratic candidates in the 2000 elections, 69 percent of their political donations, according to the Center for Responsive Politics.

`Room for Agreement'

Daschle spokeswoman Molly Rowley said there's been no agreement reached to bring the bill to the Senate floor. ``What will not pass and cannot pass in the Senate is comprehensive tort reform,'' she said. Daschle is open to negotiating on the liability issues and would support ``limited reforms that are strictly limited to terrorism incidents,'' she said.

The Bush administration and lobbyists viewed this as a sign of flexibility. Sheila Bair, assistant Treasury Secretary for financial markets, said in an interview Friday that while ``the devil's in the details,'' the Daschle position shows ``there's room for agreement.''

Opponents say they are skeptical of White House claims that building projects and jobs hang in the balance.

``There just isn't any evidence that the insurance problems are so significant that taxpayers need to be on the hook for future losses,'' said Travis Plunkett, a lobbyist for the Consumer Federation of America. The group said companies are finding terrorism insurance, albeit at a high price and with reduced coverage.

``Little by little, the insurance industry is figuring out creative ways to cover terror insurance,'' he said.

This is a very unfortunate story. After as much progress as we made yesterday with the event and the action in the Senate, to have an "administration" official quoted saying we would live without liability significantly undermines our efforts. If that was the case we could have passed a bill in December of 01.

We'll continue to work. Hopefully we'll get a UC this week or next.

Subject: Guidance on political events

we continue to get calls, the most recent from Bloomberg, on how much potus pays for political trips. how we calculate costs for air force one, how much the white house pays, who pays, etc. I would like to get a stock answer/process.

i would suggest the rnc say:

- 1) no taxpayer funds are used to pay for political activities.
- 2) the rnc receives a deposit for political events prior to the event from a campaign or other host.
- 3) the rnc refunds the excess amount.
- 4) the formula for these calculations has been used consistently dating back to president reagan.

all questions on cost of air force one, other details we would refer to the wh. travel or legal offices.

note: the amount of deposit will show up on our financial report, in the case of bloomberg inquiry for the march 1 trip to iowa, in two weeks. should we disclose the amount of deposit? or just, if pressed, tell them it will be on our financial disclosure form?

i assume wh legal and rnc legal will have to sign-off on this approach?

thanks.

Kirk -- I have not seen this article. Can you forward to me? FYI. I talked with some reporters yesterday on deep background as I indicated to you in an e-mail, and said that we could live with an up or down vote on the tort reforms in the Senate, because we were still in a strong position going into conference because of the comprehensive tort measures passed by the House. I was EXTREMELY careful to emphasize that we had to have claims consolidation and punitives in the final bill. I do not know if the Congress Daily article is based on what I said, but if it so characterized my statements, it is wrong.

This is a very unfortunate story. After as much progress as we made yesterday with the event and the action in the Senate, to have an "administration" official quoted saying we would live without liability significantly undermines our efforts. If that was the case we could have passed a bill in December of 01.

We'll continue to work. Hopefully we'll get a UC this week or next.

NY State Insurance Superintendent Greg Serio called to let us know that he will be putting out a statement tomorrow refuting today's NY times article which suggested that terrorism insurance is becoming more widely available. He will state just the opposite -- that there is a brewing crisis that is becoming more and more critical, and that Congress needs to enact a backstop program promptly.

AMENDMENT NO. _____ Calendar No. _____

Purpose: To provide for a complete substitute.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES—107th Cong., 1st Sess.

H.R. 3210

To ensure the continued financial capacity of insurers to provide coverage for risks from terrorism.

Referred to the Committee on _____
and ordered to be printed

Ordered to lie on the table and to be printed

AMENDMENT IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE intended to be proposed by Mr. DODD

Viz:

1 Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the fol-
2 lowing:

3 SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

4 This Act may be cited as the “Terrorism Risk Insur-
5 ance Act of 2001”.

6 SEC. 2. CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

7 (a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

8 (1) property and casualty insurance firms are 9 important financial institutions, the products of 10 which allow mutualization of risk and the efficient

1 act of terrorism occurring during the period be-
2 ginning on January 1, 2003 and ending at mid-
3 night on December 31, 2003, if the Program is
4 extended in accordance with section 6.

5 (8) PERSON.—The term “person” means any
6 individual, business or nonprofit entity (including
7 those organized in the form of a partnership, limited
8 liability company, corporation, or association), trust
9 or estate, or a State or political subdivision of a
10 State or other governmental unit.

11 (9) PROGRAM.—The term “Program” means
12 the Terrorism Insured Loss Shared Compensation
13 Program established by this Act.

14 (10) PROPERTY AND CASUALTY INSURANCE.—
15 The term “property and casualty insurance”—

16 (A) means commercial lines of property
17 and casualty insurance;

18 (B) includes personal lines of property and 19 casualty insurance, if a notification is made in 20 accordance with paragraph (6)(B); and

21 (C) does not include—

22 (i) Federal crop insurance issued or
23 reinsured under the Federal Crop Insur-
24 ance Act (7 U.S.C. 1501 et seq.); or

1 (ii) private mortgage insurance, as
2 that term is defined in section 2 of the
3 Homeowners Protection Act of 1998 (12
4 U.S.C. 4901).

5 (11) SECRETARY.—The term “Secretary”
6 means the Secretary of the Treasury.

7 (12) STATE.—The term “State” means any
8 State of the United States, the District of Columbia,
9 the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Common-
10 wealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, American
11 Samoa, Guam, and each of the United States Virgin
12 Islands.

13 (13) UNITED STATES.—The term “United
14 States” means all States of the United States.

15 SEC. 4. TERRORISM INSURED LOSS SHARED COMPENSA-
16 TION PROGRAM.

17 (a) ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM.—

18 (1) IN GENERAL.—There is established in the
19 Department of the Treasury the Terrorism Insured
20 Loss Shared Compensation Program.

21 (2) AUTHORITY OF THE SECRETARY.—Notwith-
22 standing any other provision of State or Federal
23 law, the Secretary shall administer the Program,
24 and shall pay the Federal share of compensation for
25 insured losses in accordance with subsection (e).

1 (b) CONDITIONS FOR FEDERAL PAYMENTS.—No
2 payment may be made by the Secretary under subsection
3 (e), unless—

4 (1) a person that suffers an insured loss, or a
5 person acting on behalf of that person, files a claim
6 with a participating insurance company;

7 (2) the participating insurance company pro-
8 vides clear and conspicuous disclosure to the policy-
9 holder of the premium charged for insured losses
10 covered by the Program and the Federal share of 11 compensation for insured losses under the
12 Program—

13 (A) in the case of any policy covering an
14 insured loss that is issued on or after the date
15 of enactment of this Act, in the policy, at the 16 time of offer, purchase, and renewal of the pol-
17 icy; and

18 (B) in the case of any policy that is issued
19 before the date of enactment of this Act, not
20 later than 90 days after that date of enactment;

21 (3) the participating insurance company proc-
22 esses the claim for the insured loss in accordance 23 with its standard business practices, and any reason-
24 able procedures that the Secretary may prescribe;
25 and

1 (4) the participating insurance company sub-
2 mits to the Secretary, in accordance with such rea-
3 sonable procedures as the Secretary may establish—

4 (A) a claim for payment of the Federal
5 share of compensation for insured losses under
6 the Program;

7 (B) written verification and certification—

8 (i) of the underlying claim; and

9 (ii) of all payments made for insured
10 losses; and

11 (C) certification of its compliance with the 12 provisions of this subsection.

13 (c) MANDATORY PARTICIPATION; MANDATORY
14 AVAILABILITY.—Each insurance company that meets the 15 definition of a participating insurance company under sec-
16 tion 3—

17 (1) shall participate in the Program;

18 (2) shall make available in all of its property
19 and casualty insurance policies (in all of its partici-
20 pating lines), coverage for insured losses; and

21 (3) shall make available property and casualty
22 insurance coverage for insured losses that does not
23 differ materially from the terms, amounts, and other
24 coverage limitations applicable to losses arising from 25 events other than acts of terrorism.

1 (d) PARTICIPATION BY SELF INSURED ENTITIES.—

2 (1) DETERMINATION BY THE SECRETARY.—

3 The Secretary may, in consultation with the NAIC,
4 establish procedures to allow participation in the
5 Program by municipalities and other governmental
6 or quasi-governmental entities (and by any other en-
7 tity, as the Secretary deems appropriate) operating
8 through self insurance arrangements that were in
9 existence on September 11, 2001, but only if the 10 Secretary makes a determination with regard to par-
11 ticipation by any such entity before the occurrence
12 of an act of terrorism in which the entity incurs an 13 insured loss.

14 (2) PARTICIPATION.—If the Secretary makes a
15 determination to allow an entity described in para-
16 graph (1) to participate in the Program, all reports,
17 conditions, requirements, and standards established
18 by this Act for participating insurance companies
19 shall apply to any such entity, as determined to be 20 appropriate by the Secretary.

21 (e) SHARED INSURANCE LOSS COVERAGE.—

22 (1) FEDERAL SHARE.—

23 (A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the cap on
24 liability under paragraph (2) and the limitation
25 under paragraph (6), the Federal share of com-

1 pensation under the Program to be paid by the
2 Secretary for insured losses resulting from an
3 act of terrorism occurring during the period be-
4 ginning on the date of enactment of this Act
5 and ending at midnight on December 31,
6 2002—

7 (i) shall be equal to 80 percent of that
8 portion of the amount of aggregate insured
9 losses that—

10 (I) exceeds the participating in-
11 surance company deductibles required
12 to be paid for those insured losses;
13 and

14 (II) does not exceed
15 $10,000,000,000; and

16 (ii) shall be equal to 90 percent of
17 that portion of the amount of aggregate in-
18 sured losses that—

19 (I) exceeds the participating in-
20 surance company deductibles required
21 to be paid for those insured losses;
22 and

23 (II) exceeds $10,000,000,000.

24 (B) EXTENSION PERIOD.—If the Program
25 is extended in accordance with section 6, the

1 Federal share of compensation under the Pro-
2 gram to be paid by the Secretary for insured
3 losses resulting from an act of terrorism occur-
4 ring during the period beginning on January 1,
5 2003 and ending at midnight on December 31,
6 2003, shall be calculated in accordance with
7 clauses (i) and (ii) of subparagraph (A), subject
8 to the cap on liability in paragraph (2) and the 9 limitation under paragraph (6).

10 (C) PRO RATA SHARE.—If, during the pe-
11 riod described in subparagraph (A) (or during 12 the period described in subparagraph (B), if the 13 Program is extended in accordance with section
14 6), the aggregate insured losses for that period
15 exceed $10,000,000,000, the Secretary shall de-
16 termine the pro rata share for each partici-
17 pating insurance company of the Federal share
18 of compensation for insured losses calculated
19 under subparagraph (A).

20 (2) CAP ON ANNUAL LIABILITY.—Notwith-
21 standing paragraph (1), or any other provision of 22 Federal or State law, if the aggregate insured losses
23 exceed $100,000,000,000 during any period referred
24 to in subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (1)—

1 (A) the Secretary shall not make any pay-
2 ment under this Act for any portion of the
3 amount of such losses that exceeds
4 $100,000,000,000; and

5 (B) participating insurance companies
6 shall not be liable for the payment of any por-
7 tion of the amount that exceeds
8 $100,000,000,000.

9 (3) NOTICE TO CONGRESS.—The Secretary
10 shall notify the Congress if estimated or actual ag-11 gregate insured losses exceed $100,000,000,000 in 12 any period described in paragraph (1), and the Con-
13 gress shall determine the procedures for and the 14 source of any such excess payments.

15 (4) FINAL NETTING.—The Secretary shall have
16 sole discretion to determine the time at which claims
17 relating to any insured loss or act of terrorism shall 18 become final.

19 (5) DETERMINATIONS FINAL.—Any determina-
20 tion of the Secretary under this subsection shall be
21 final, and shall not be subject to judicial review.

22 (6) IN-FORCE REINSURANCE AGREEMENTS.—
23 For policies covered by reinsurance contracts in 24 force on the date of enactment of this Act, until the 25 in-force reinsurance contract is renewed, amended,

1 or has reached its 1-year anniversary date, any Fed-
2 eral share of compensation due to a participating in-
3 surance company for insured losses during the effec-
4 tive period of the Program shall be shared—

5 (A) with all reinsurance companies to
6 which the participating insurance company has
7 ceded some share of the insured loss pursuant
8 to an in-force reinsurance contract; and

9 (B) in a manner that distributes the Fed-
10 eral share of compensation for insured losses
11 between the participating insurance company
12 and the reinsurance company or companies in 13 the same proportion as the insured losses would 14 have been distributed if the Program did not
15 exist.

16 SEC. 5. GENERAL AUTHORITY AND ADMINISTRATION OF 17 CLAIMS.

18 (a) GENERAL AUTHORITY.—The Secretary shall have
19 the powers and authorities necessary to carry out the Pro-
20 gram, including authority—

21 (1) to investigate and audit all claims under the 22 Program; and

23 (2) to prescribe regulations and procedures to 24 implement the Program.

1 (b) INTERIM RULES AND PROCEDURES.—The Sec-
2 retary shall issue interim final rules or procedures speci-
3 fying the manner in which—

4 (1) participating insurance companies may file,
5 verify, and certify claims under the Program;

6 (2) the Secretary shall publish or otherwise
7 publicly announce the applicable percentage of in-
8 sured losses that is the responsibility of participating
9 insurance companies and the percentage that is the 10 responsibility of the Federal Government under the
11 Program;

12 (3) the Federal share of compensation for in-
13 sured losses will be paid under the Program, includ-
14 ing payments based on estimates of or actual aggre-
15 gate insured losses;

16 (4) the Secretary may, at any time, seek repay-
17 ment from or reimburse any participating insurance
18 company, based on estimates of insured losses under
19 the Program, to effectuate the insured loss sharing
20 provisions contained in section 4;

21 (5) each participating insurance company that
22 incurs insured losses shall pay its pro rata share of 23 insured losses, in accordance with section 4; and

24 (6) the Secretary will determine any final net-
25 ting of payments for actual insured losses under the

1 use of financial resources and enhance the ability of
2 the economy to maintain stability, while responding
3 to a variety of economic, political, environmental,
4 and other risks with a minimum of disruption;

5 (2) the ability of businesses and individuals to
6 obtain property and casualty insurance at reasonable
7 and predictable prices, in order to spread the risk of 8 both routine and catastrophic loss, is critical to eco-
9 nomic growth, urban development, and the construc-
10 tion and maintenance of public and private housing,
11 as well as to the promotion of United States exports
12 and foreign trade in an increasingly interconnected
13 world;

14 (3) the ability of the insurance industry to 15 cover the unprecedented financial risks presented by 16 potential acts of terrorism in the United States can 17 be a major factor in the recovery from terrorist at-18 tacks, while maintaining the stability of the econ-
19 omy;

20 (4) widespread financial market uncertainties
21 have arisen following the terrorist attacks of Sep-
22 tember 11, 2001, including the absence of informa-
23 tion from which financial institutions can make sta-
24 tistically valid estimates of the probability and cost
25 of future terrorist events, and therefore the size,

1 Program, including payments owed to the Federal
2 Government from any participating insurance com-
3 pany and any Federal share of compensation for in-
4 sured losses owed to any participating insurance
5 company, to effectuate the insured loss sharing pro-
6 visions contained in section 4.

7 (c) SUBROGATION RIGHTS.—The United States shall
8 have the right of subrogation with respect to any payment
9 made by the United States under the Program.

10 (d) CONTRACTS FOR SERVICES.—The Secretary may
11 employ persons or contract for services as may be nec-
12 essary to implement the Program.

13 (e) CIVIL PENALTIES.—The Secretary may assess
14 civil money penalties for violations of this Act or any rule,
15 regulation, or order issued by the Secretary under this Act
16 relating to the submission of false or misleading informa-
17 tion for purposes of the Program, or any failure to repay
18 any amount required to be reimbursed under regulations
19 or procedures described in section 5(b). The authority
20 granted under this subsection shall continue during any 21 period in which the Secretary's authority under section
22 6(d) is in effect.

23 SEC. 6. TERMINATION OF PROGRAM; DISCRETIONARY EX-
24 TENSION.

25 (a) TERMINATION OF PROGRAM.—

1 (1) IN GENERAL.—The Program shall termi-
2 nate at midnight on December 31, 2002, unless the
3 Secretary—

4 (A) determines, after considering the re-
5 port and finding required by this section, that
6 the Program should be extended for one addi-
7 tional year, until midnight on December 31,
8 2003; and

9 (B) promptly notifies the Congress of such
10 determination and the reasons therefor.

11 (2) DETERMINATION FINAL.—The determina-
12 tion of the Secretary under paragraph (1) shall be
13 final, and shall not be subject to judicial review.

14 (3) TERMINATION AFTER EXTENSION.—If the
15 Program is extended under paragraph (1), the Pro-
16 gram shall terminate at midnight on December 31,
17 2003.

18 (b) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Not later than 9
19 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Sec-
20 retary shall submit a report to Congress—

21 (1) regarding—

22 (A) the availability of insurance coverage
23 for acts of terrorism;

1 (B) the affordability of such coverage, in-
2 cluding the effect of such coverage on pre-
3 miums; and

4 (C) the capacity of the insurance industry
5 to absorb future losses resulting from acts of
6 terrorism, taking into account the profitability
7 of the insurance industry; and

8 (2) that considers—

9 (A) the impact of the Program on each of 10 the factors described in paragraph (1); and

11 (B) the probable impact on such factors
12 and on the United States economy if the Pro-
13 gram terminates at midnight on December 31,
14 2002.

15 (c) FINDING REQUIRED.—A determination under 16 subsection (a) to extend the Program shall be based on 17 a finding by the Secretary that—

18 (1) widespread market uncertainties con-
19 tinue to disrupt the ability of insurance compa-
20 nies to price insurance coverage for losses re-
21 sulting from acts of terrorism, thereby resulting 22 in the continuing unavailability of affordable in-
23 surance for consumers; and

24 (2) extending the Program for an addi-
25 tional year would likely encourage economic sta-

1 bilization and facilitate a transition to a viable
2 market for private terrorism risk insurance.

3 (d) CONTINUING AUTHORITY TO PAY OR ADJUST
4 COMPENSATION.—Following the termination of the Pro-
5 gram under subsection (a), the Secretary may take such
6 actions as may be necessary to ensure payment, reim-
7 bursement, or adjustment of compensation for insured
8 losses arising out of any act of terrorism occurring during 9 the period in which the Program was in effect under this
10 Act, in accordance with the provisions of section 4 and 11 regulations promulgated thereunder.

12 (e) REPEAL; SAVINGS CLAUSE.—This Act is repealed
13 at midnight on the final termination date of the Program
14 under subsection (a), except that such repeal shall not be
15 construed—

16 (1) to prevent the Secretary from taking, or
17 causing to be taken, such actions under subsection
18 (d) of this section and sections 4(e)(4), 4(e)(5), 19 5(a)(1), 5(c), and 5(e) (as in effect on the day be-20 fore the date of such repeal), and applicable regula-
21 tions promulgated thereunder, during any period in
22 which the authority of the Secretary under sub-
23 section (d) of this section is in effect; or

24 (2) to prevent the availability of funding under
25 section 10(b) during any period in which the author-

1 ity of the Secretary under subsection (d) of this sec-
2 tion is in effect.

3 (f) SENSE OF THE CONGRESS.—It is the sense of the
4 Congress that the Secretary should make any determina-
5 tion under subsection (a) in sufficient time to enable par-
6 ticipating insurance companies to include coverage for acts
7 of terrorism in their policies for 2003.

8 (g) STUDY AND REPORT ON SCOPE OF THE PRO-
9 GRAM.—

10 (1) STUDY.—The Secretary, after consultation
11 with the NAIC, representatives of the insurance in-
12 dustry, and other experts in the insurance field,
13 shall conduct a study of the potential effects of acts
14 of terrorism on the availability of life insurance and 15 other lines of insurance coverage.

16 (2) REPORT.—Not later than 9 months after
17 the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary
18 shall submit a report to the Congress on the results
19 of the study conducted under paragraph (1).

20 (h) REPORTS REGARDING TERRORISM RISK INSUR-
21 ANCE PREMIUMS.—

22 (1) REPORT TO THE NAIC.—Beginning 6
23 months after the date of enactment of this Act, and 24 every 6 months thereafter, each participating insur-
25 ance company shall submit a report to the NAIC

1 that states the premium rates charged by that par-
2 ticipating insurance company during the preceding
3 6-month period for insured losses covered by the
4 Program, and includes an explanation of and jus-
5 tification for those rates.

6 (2) REPORTS FORWARDED.—The NAIC shall
7 promptly forward copies of each report submitted
8 under paragraph (1) to the Secretary, the Secretary
9 of Commerce, the Chairman of the Federal Trade
10 Commission, and the Comptroller General of the 11 United States.

12 (3) AGENCY REPORTS TO CONGRESS.—

13 (A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, the Sec-
14 retary of Commerce, and the Chairman of the 15 Federal Trade Commission shall submit joint
16 reports to Congress and the Comptroller Gen-
17 eral of the United States summarizing and eval-
18 uating the reports forwarded under paragraph 19 (2).

20 (B) TIMING.—The reports required under
21 subparagraph (A) shall be submitted—

22 (i) 9 months after the date of enact-
23 ment of this Act; and

24 (ii) 12 months after the date of sub-
25 mission of the first report under clause (i).

1 (4) GAO EVALUATION AND REPORT.—

2 (A) EVALUATION.—The Comptroller Gen-
3 eral of the United States shall evaluate each re-
4 port submitted under paragraph (3), and upon
5 request, the Secretary, the Secretary of Com-
6 merce, the Chairman of the Federal Trade
7 Commission, and the NAIC shall provide to the 8 Comptroller all documents, records, and any
9 other information that the Comptroller deems
10 necessary to carry out such evaluation.

11 (B) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Not later
12 than 90 days after receipt of each report sub-
13 mitted under paragraph (3), the Comptroller
14 General of the United States shall submit to 15 Congress a report of the evaluation required by
16 subparagraph (A).

17 SEC. 7. PRESERVATION OF STATE LAW.

18 Nothing in this Act shall affect the jurisdiction or 19 regulatory authority of the insurance commissioner (or 20 any agency or office performing like functions) of any 21 State over any participating insurance company or other
22 person—

23 (1) except as specifically provided in this Act;

24 and

25 (2) except that—

1 (A) the definition of the term “act of ter-
2 rorism” in section 3 shall be the exclusive defi-
3 nition of that term for purposes of compensa-
4 tion for insured losses under this Act, and shall
5 preempt any provision of State law that is in-
6 consistent with that definition, to the extent
7 that such provision of law would otherwise
8 apply to any type of insurance covered by this
9 Act;

10 (B) during the period beginning on the 11 date of enactment of this Act and ending at 12 midnight on December 31, 2002, rates for ter-
13 rorism risk insurance covered by this Act and 14 filed with any State shall not be subject to prior 15 approval or a waiting period, under any law of 16 a State that would otherwise be applicable, ex-
17 cept that nothing in this Act affects the ability
18 of any State to invalidate a rate as excessive,
19 inadequate, or unfairly discriminatory; and

20 (C) during the period beginning on the
21 date of enactment of this Act and for so long
22 as the Program is in effect, as provided in sec-
23 tion 6 (including any period during which the 24 authority of the Secretary under section 6(d) is 25 in effect), books and records of any partici-

1 pating insurance company that are relevant to
2 the Program shall be provided, or caused to be
3 provided, to the Secretary or the designee of the 4 Secretary, upon request by the Secretary or
5 such designee, notwithstanding any provision of
6 the laws of any State prohibiting or limiting
7 such access.

8 SEC. 8. SENSE OF THE CONGRESS REGARDING CAPACITY
9 BUILDING.

10 It is the sense of the Congress that the insurance in-
11 dustry should build capacity and aggregate risk to provide 12 affordable property and casualty insurance coverage for 13 terrorism risk.

14 SEC. 9. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS; PAYMENT
15 AUTHORITY.

16 (a) ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES.—There are author-
17 ized to be appropriated to the Secretary, out of funds in 18 the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as 19 may be necessary for administrative expenses of the Pro-
20 gram, to remain available until expended.

21 (b) PAYMENT AUTHORITY.—This Act constitutes
22 payment authority in advance of appropriation Acts, and
23 represents the obligation of the Federal Government to 24 provide for the Federal share of compensation for insured
25 losses under the Program.

1 SEC. 10. PROCEDURES FOR CIVIL ACTIONS.

2 (a) FEDERAL CAUSE OF ACTION.—

3 (1) IN GENERAL.—There shall exist a Federal
4 cause of action for property damage, personal injury,
5 or death arising out of or resulting from an act of
6 terrorism, which shall be the exclusive cause of ac-
7 tion and remedy for claims for such property dam-
8 age, personal injury, or death, except as provided in
9 subsection (d).

10 (2) PREEMPTION OF STATE ACTIONS.—All
11 State causes of action of any kind for property dam-
12 age, personal injury, or death arising out of or re-
13 sulting from an act of terrorism that are otherwise
14 available under State law, are hereby preempted, ex-
15 cept as provided in subsection (d).

16 (b) GOVERNING LAW.—The substantive law for deci-
17 sion in an action described in subsection (a)(1) shall be 18 derived from the law, including applicable choice of law
19 principles, of the State in which the act of terrorism giving
20 rise to the action occurred, except to the extent that—

21 (1) the law, including choice of law principles,
22 of another State is determined to be applicable to 23 the action by the district court hearing the action;
24 or

25 (2) otherwise applicable State law (including 26 that determined pursuant to paragraph (1)), is in-

1 funding, and allocation of the risk of loss caused by
2 such acts of terrorism;

3 (5) a decision by property and casualty insurers
4 to deal with such uncertainties, either by termi-
5 nating property and casualty coverage for losses
6 arising from terrorist events, or by radically esca-
7 lating premium coverage to compensate for risks of 8 loss that are not readily predictable, could seriously
9 hamper ongoing and planned construction, property
10 acquisition, and other business projects, generate a
11 dramatic increase in rents, and otherwise suppress 12 economic activity; and

13 (6) the United States Government should pro-
14 vide temporary financial compensation to insured
15 parties, contributing to the stabilization of the 16 United States economy in a time of national crisis,
17 while the financial services industry develops the sys-
18 tems, mechanisms, products, and programs nec-
19 essary to create a viable financial services market for 20 private terrorism risk insurance.

21 (b) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this Act is to estab-
22 lish a temporary Federal program that provides for a
23 transparent system of shared public and private com-
24 pensation for insured losses resulting from acts of ter-
25 rorism, in order to—

1 consistent with or otherwise preempted by Federal
2 law.

3 (c) PUNITIVE DAMAGES.—Any amounts awarded in
4 a civil action described in subsection (a)(1) that are attrib-
5 utable to punitive damages shall not count as insured
6 losses for purposes of this Act.

7 (d) CLAIMS AGAINST TERRORISTS.—Nothing in this
8 section shall in any way be construed to limit the ability
9 of any plaintiff to seek any form of recovery from any per-
10 son, government, or other entity that was a participant
11 in, or aider and abettor of, any act of terrorism.

12 (e) EFFECTIVE PERIOD.—This section shall apply
13 only to actions described in subsection (a)(1) arising out
14 of or resulting from acts of terrorism that occur during
15 the effective period of the Program, including, if applica-
16 ble, any extension period provided for under section 6.

1 (1) protect consumers by addressing market
2 disruptions and ensure the continued widespread
3 availability and affordability of property and cas-
4 ualty insurance for terrorism risk; and

5 (2) allow for a transitional period for the pri-
6 vate markets to stabilize, resume pricing of such in-
7 surance, and build capacity to absorb any future
8 losses, while preserving State insurance regulation
9 and consumer protections.

10 SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

11 In this Act, the following definitions shall apply:

12 (1) ACT OF TERRORISM.—

13 (A) CERTIFICATION.—The term “act of 14 terrorism” means any act that is certified by 15 the Secretary, in concurrence with the Sec-
16 retary of State, and the Attorney General of the 17 United States—

18 (i) to be a violent act or an act that 19 is dangerous to—

20 (I) human life;

21 (II) property; or

22 (III) infrastructure;

23 (ii) to have resulted in damage within
24 the United States, or outside the United

1 States in the case of an air carrier de-
2 scribed in paragraph (3)(A)(ii); and

3 (iii) to have been committed by an in-
4 dividual or individuals acting on behalf of
5 any foreign person or foreign interest, as
6 part of an effort to coerce the civilian pop-
7 ulation of the United States or to influence
8 the policy or affect the conduct of the 9 United States Government by coercion.

10 (B) LIMITATION.—No act or event shall be 11 certified by the Secretary as an act of terrorism
12 if—

13 (i) the act or event is committed in
14 the course of a war declared by the Con-
15 gress; or

16 (ii) losses resulting from the act or
17 event, in the aggregate, do not exceed 18 $5,000,000.

19 (C) DETERMINATIONS FINAL.—Any certifi-
20 cation of, or determination not to certify, an act
21 or event as an act of terrorism under this para-
22 graph shall be final, and shall not be subject to
23 judicial review.

24 (2) BUSINESS INTERRUPTION COVERAGE.—The
25 term “business interruption coverage”—

1 (A) means coverage of losses for temporary
2 relocation expenses and ongoing expenses, in-
3 cluding ordinary wages, where—

4 (i) there is physical damage to the
5 business premises of such magnitude that
6 the business cannot open for business;

7 (ii) there is physical damage to other
8 property that totally prevents customers or
9 employees from gaining access to the busi-
10 ness premises; or

11 (iii) the Federal, State, or local gov-
12 ernment shuts down an area due to phys-
13 ical or environmental damage, thereby pre-
14 venting customers or employees from gain-
15 ing access to the business premises; and

16 (B) does not include lost profits, other
17 than in the case of a small business concern (as
18 defined in section 3 of the Small Business Act
19 (15 U.S.C. 632) and applicable regulations
20 thereunder) in any case described in clause (i),
21 (ii), or (iii) of subparagraph (A).

1 (3) INSURED LOSS.—The term “insured loss”—

2 (A) means any loss resulting from an act
3 of terrorism that is covered by primary property
4 and casualty insurance, including business
5 interruption coverage, issued by a participating
6 insurance company, if such loss—

7 (i) occurs within the United States; or

8 (ii) occurs to an air carrier (as de-
9 fined in section 40102 of title 49, United
10 States Code) or to a United States flag
11 vessel (or a vessel based principally in the 12 United States, on which United States in-
13 come tax is paid and whose insurance cov-
14 erage is subject to regulation in the United 15 States), regardless of where the loss oc-
16 curs; and

17 (B) excludes coverage under any life or 18 health insurance.

19 (4) MARKET SHARE.—

20 (A) IN GENERAL.—The “market share” of
21 a participating insurance company shall be cal-
22 culated using the total amount of direct written 23 property and casualty insurance premiums for 24 the participating insurance company during the 25 2-year period preceding the year in which the

1 subject act of terrorism occurred (or during
2 such other period for which adequate data are
3 available, as determined by the Secretary), as a
4 percentage of the aggregate of all such property
5 and casualty insurance premiums industry-wide
6 during that period.

7 (B) ADJUSTMENTS.—The Secretary may
8 adjust the market share of a participating in-
9 surance company under subparagraph (A), as
10 necessary to reflect current market participa-
11 tion of that participating insurance company.

12 (5) NAIC.—The term “NAIC” means the Na-
13 tional Association of Insurance Commissioners.

14 (6) PARTICIPATING INSURANCE COMPANY.—
15 The term “participating insurance company” means
16 any insurance company, including any subsidiary or 17 affiliate thereof—

18 (A) that—

19 (i) is licensed or admitted to engage
20 in the business of providing primary insur-
21 ance in any State, and was so licensed or
22 admitted on September 11, 2001; or

23 (ii) is not licensed or admitted as de-
24 scribed in clause (i), if it is an eligible sur-
25 plus line carrier listed on the Quarterly

1 Listing of Alien Insurers of the NAIC, or
2 any successor thereto;

3 (B) that receives direct premiums for any
4 type of commercial property and casualty insur-
5 ance coverage or that, not later than 21 days
6 after the date of enactment of this Act, submits
7 written notification to the Secretary of its in-
8 tent to participate in the Program with regard
9 to personal lines of property and casualty insur-
10 ance; and

11 (C) that meets any other criteria that the
12 Secretary may reasonably prescribe.

13 (7) PARTICIPATING INSURANCE COMPANY DE-
14 DUCTIBLE.—The term “participating insurance com-
15 pany deductible” means—

16 (A) a participating insurance company’s
17 market share, multiplied by $10,000,000,000,
18 with respect to insured losses resulting from an
19 act of terrorism occurring during the period be-
20 ginning on the date of enactment of this Act
21 and ending at midnight on December 31, 2002;
22 and

23 (B) a participating insurance company’s
24 market share, multiplied by $15,000,000,000,
25 with respect to insured losses resulting from an

Jim Wilkinson has been asked to speak on the "White House & Tax Policy" at the NRCC's 2002 Tax Summit breakfast on May 23, 2002. It will be a legislative briefing for the NRCC's major donor programs and last year's event raised more that $1 million. He is available to speak but wanted me to check with you to see that he is able to. I have the official faxed invite if you'd like to see that. Please let me know whenever you can. Thank you!

Brett Kavanaugh may have more thoughts but I think the answer should include the fact that Dr. Marburger serves in a Senate confirmed position and is a director of a congressionally created office, not an Assistant to the President.

Subject: Q&A -- prep for hearing tomorrow

Dr. Marburger is scheduled to testify before Senate Armed Services tomorrow morning on technology for combatting terrorism. Want to make sure we're prepared w/ the right answer if anyone asks why OSTP testifies and not Ridge. I've been in contact w/ OHS and they sent talking points, which I drew from for this Q&A -- can you please take a quick look to make sure this is what you would want us to say? Please call me if you have concerns with this....Thanks, Maureen 6-6037

Q: Dr. Marburger, you are the Science Advisor to the President, and the Director of OSTP in the White House. Why is it that you can come testify to Congress on homeland security matters, but the Director of Homeland Security in the White House says he cannot? What is the difference between you and Gov. Ridge?

A: As I outlined in my testimony, OSTP acts as interface for science and technology policy on a number of levels, within the White House as well as with the external community and Congress. We do provide technical assistance to the White House and advice on scientific matters. However, we also have a significant and active role in coordinating research among agencies, in soliciting input from the external research community and in interacting with the private sector and Congress on science and technology policy questions. I would liken Gov. Ridge's role more closely with the National Security Advisor. The distinction is that the President can and should be able to have special assistants on sensitive national and homeland security matters, devoted to providing advice solely to the President.

(if pressed further....)

REV_00142898

A: I can only testify to you today on what my role is; I am not prepared to provide testimony on the functions of other EOP offices or officials.

Anne,

How are you?

I'm writing a long piece about Alberto Gonzales that will cover both his career in Texas and time in Washington. It is currently slated to be a cover story.

I want to interview Gonzales and perhaps some of his senior aides. What are the chances of making that happen? This is going to be a fairly exhaustive profile, and I can't imagine doing it without speaking to him.

Ideally, I would like to talk to him within the next week, but I can certainly be flexible. Thanks for considering this request, and let me know if you have any questions about the piece.

Best,

Attached is a new Draft which reflects the discussions we had earlier today. Any language that was previously redlined in Draft 15/DOJ Suggested Revision, but that was agreed to by all the parties today, is now in bold typeface.

In the places where we still have outstanding issues to discuss tomorrow, I have left the redline in and capitalized the phrases. Specifically, no agreement has been reached on: the language in section 2 pertaining to "decisions"; the reprieve/pardon language in section 4; and the entirety of section 5 and whether the ratification language should be in the text of the amendment itself or in the joint resolution.

Feel free to give me a call (202-514-3824) if you have any questions. Thanks!

 DOJ SUGGESTED REVISION

9 April 2002

JOINT RESOLUTION

Proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to protect the rights of crime victims.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein),

That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid for all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States ~~within seven years from the date of its submission by the Congress, and which~~ shall take effect on the 180th day after ratification of this article:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. The rights of victims of violent crime, being capable of protection without denying the constitutional rights of those accused of victimizing them, are hereby established and shall not be denied by any State or the United States and may be restricted only as provided in this article.

"SECTION 2. A victim of violent crime shall have the right to reasonable and timely notice of any public proceeding involving the crime and of any release or escape of the accused; the rights not to be excluded from such public proceeding and reasonably to be heard at public release, plea, sentencing, reprieve, and pardon proceedings; and the right to ~~adjudicative~~ decisions IN SUCH PUBLIC PROCEEDING that duly consider the victim's safety, interest in avoiding unreasonable delay, and just and timely claims to restitution from the offender. These rights shall not be restricted except when and to the degree dictated by a substantial interest in public safety or the administration of criminal justice, or by compelling necessity.

"SECTION 3. Nothing in this article shall be construed to provide grounds for a new trial or to authorize any claim for damages. Only the victim or the victim's lawful representative may assert the rights established by this article, and no person accused of the crime may obtain any form of relief hereunder.

"SECTION 4. Congress shall have power to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of this article, ~~except those pertaining to federal pardon and commutation proceedings.~~ NOTHING IN THIS ARTICLE SHALL BE CONSTRUED TO AFFECT THE PRESIDENT'S AUTHORITY TO GRANT REPRIEVES OR PARDONS.

"SECTION 5. THIS ARTICLE SHALL BE INOPERATIVE UNLESS IT

this idea has been a common proposal for punis reform in past. Problem is that it can create very perverse incentives for juries -- and the government. And it does not help deal with the problem of uncertainty for defendants and a limited pool of defendant resources because punis awards will remain -- and arguably be even higher.

What are your thoughts on Peter's idea below. Instead of banning all punitive damages -- have all punitive damages go to the federal treasury.

How about we seriously propose that it's ok if punitive damages are left in place but that any punitive damages just be paid over the federal government. after all, the purpose of punitive damages is just to punish, not to compensate or award victims.

Senate Majority Leader Daschle has no intention of bringing a terrorism insurance bill to the floor next week because no agreements have yet been reached on the measure's tort reform language, a Daschle spokeswoman reiterated today in response to a published report. Proponents of reform continue to insist that a federal insurance program limit the ability of terrorism victims to seek punitive damages against businesses. While saying the federal reinsurance measure remains a priority for Daschle this Congress, the spokeswoman said no agreement has been reached that would clear the measure for action. "We still hope to get this done in the next work period, by Memorial Day," she said, but added: "He will not bring it to the floor until the issue of comprehensive tort reform is resolved. There's very limited time left in this Congress [and] that would be sure to provoke a very long debate if not a filibuster. It has to be worked out before the floor." Daschle has made some concessions and remains supportive of a reinsurance measure introduced last year by Sens. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., and Phil Gramm, R-Texas, she added. Daschle "would even be willing to accept [the bill's] limited tort reforms strictly related to terrorist incidents," she said.

Dear Mr. Kavanaugh,

Thank you again for agreeing to speak at the Republican National Lawyers Association Conference on April 19 at 11:30 a.m. on the judicial nomination process.

Are there any materials that Mr. Berenson or you would like to include in the materials that the RNLA will be distributing regarding the conference? The RNLA will be applying for CLE credit for your presentation and will be pulling together all the relevant material in the next couple days. (I have been also talking to Mr. Berenson about this as well.)

Also, could you email or fax us a biography to include in the conference materials? (Fax number is 703-248-0470.)

Thanks again for agreeing to speak at the conference. It should be our largest and best attended ever. If you can arrive a little early Senator Hatch will be speaking immediately before you and may be of interest to you or Mr. Berenson. (You are, of course, free to attend and enjoy any portion of the conference including the reception afterwards.)

Thank you again,

FINANCE

Parties May Reopen Talks On Terrorism Insurance Measure

;;;;;For proponents of a federal terrorism reinsurance program, this may turn out to be a big week.

;;;;;Monday featured a carefully staged White House media event, where President Bush, flanked by representatives of labor and business, exhorted the Senate to pass a bill.

;;;;;It also included an impromptu exchange of unanimous consent proposals by Senate Democratic and Republican leaders--the first such public conversation since the bill was shelved in December.

;;;;;The Senate bill, which would have provided a short-term, coinsurance arrangement between the private insurance market and the federal government, stalled last year mostly because of differences over its tort reform language.

;;;;;Proponents of reform continue to insist that the federal insurance program limit the ability of terrorism victims to seek punitive damages against businesses or the federal government or both, while opponents of limiting damages are expected to hold fast.

;;;;;Sources on both sides of the aisle conceded that the exchange Monday between Majority Whip Reid and Minority Whip Nickles was, in essence, little more than posturing, since it effectively replayed offers both sides had made and rejected in December.

;;;;;Nevertheless, their conversation on the Senate floor constituted an "opening gambit" that signals the onset of the new phase of talks, one Senate Democratic source said.
;;;;;Daschle has said repeatedly that he wants to move the reinsurance bill by Memorial Day, and he is sticking to that goal, a Daschle spokeswoman said Tuesday.
;;;;;Although no leadership meetings are currently scheduled, "genuine and bipartisan" efforts are going on to reach a procedural agreement, she added. But she said: "Republicans are going to have to decide if they want to get a bill done. Right now, they seem more interested in making this a tort reform bill."
;;;;;Senate Republican aides countered the criticism, characterizing Democrats as slavishly devoted to the trial bar. "They're just going to have to get over it," the staffer said.
;;;;;Senate Banking ranking member Phil Gramm, R-Texas, a lead negotiator, told reporters Tuesday he expected the principals would meet soon.
;;;;;Gramm said he hoped to reach unanimous consent to bring up a "compromise" reinsurance bill he introduced last year. That bill is essentially identical to a measure he had crafted with Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., and other members of the Senate Banking and Commerce committees.
;;;;;The bill contains some narrow lawsuit limitations. But Gramm said Tuesday he hoped for a "jump ball" on the liability issue, with each side able to offer its own amendments on the subject.
;;;;;"I think eventually a compromise will be worked out," said Gramm.
;;;;;Reid offered Monday to use a compromise bill written in December by Dodd, Senate Banking Chairman Sarbanes and Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., as the starting point. That measure also contains some narrow tort reforms.
;;;;;Sen. Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., who rejected the Democratic offer last year, said Tuesday he was inclined to accept a reinsurance bill that barred punitive damages.
;;;;;Meanwhile, observers on all sides of the issue applauded Bush as having struck what they said was just the right tone at Monday's event. Although he urged Senate action, Bush avoided personal attacks on Democratic leaders.
;;;;;Bush also refrained from mentioning the controversy surrounding the bill's tort reform language or taking shots at the trial bar, which is concerned the bill will be used to curtail legal rights. Instead, Bush cast the bill as vital to preserving jobs and national security. Pamela Barnett

I'm not sure it addresses either side's concerns. We'd still be allowing terrorism lawsuits to exhaust deft resources and they would still have to vote for difficult precedent.

We sent her the below note along with the letter sent to Leahy on April 5. Hatch, Gramm and Hutchison were all cc'd on the letter but apparently she had not seen it.

Dear Senator Hutchison:

As we discussed, attached is the letter to Senator Leahy regarding campaign contributions to Justice Owen.

Please call me if you have any questions.

Sincerely,

Ask Brett about that. I doubt that political fundraisers count as official government events to which 18 USC 1001 would be applicable.

Looks to me like providing a copy of a ticket to try to obtain admission to an official Presidential event would be punishable under 18 U.S.C. 1001. Perhaps we can say something like:

"Only original tickets will be accepted for admission to Presidential events. It is a violation of Federal law to attempt to gain admission to this event by duplicating or reproducing this ticket."

On a completely different topic, you may want to check out Newsmax.com. If you take a look at the upper left hand corner of the home page, they're selling what appears to be the official portrait of the President with the U.S. seal.

Libby,

I'm re-designing our presidential event tickets and would like to add a "do not duplicate or else" disclaimer to the back of the ticket to discourage counterfeiting. Do you all have an official federal government sentence that would match this request?

Thanks,
Carrie

AMENDMENT NO. _____ Calendar No. _____

Purpose: To provide for a complete substitute.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES—107th Cong., 1st Sess.

H.R. 3210

To ensure the continued financial capacity of insurers to provide coverage for risks from terrorism.

Referred to the Committee on _____
and ordered to be printed

Ordered to lie on the table and to be printed

AMENDMENT IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE intended
to be proposed by Mr. DODD

Viz:

1 Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the fol-
2 lowing:

3 SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

4 This Act may be cited as the “Terrorism Risk Insur-
5 ance Act of 2001”.

6 SEC. 2. CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

7 (a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

8 (1) property and casualty insurance firms are
9 important financial institutions, the products of
10 which allow mutualization of risk and the efficient

1 act of terrorism occurring during the period be-
2 ginning on January 1, 2003 and ending at mid-
3 night on December 31, 2003, if the Program is
4 extended in accordance with section 6.

5 (8) PERSON.—The term “person” means any
6 individual, business or nonprofit entity (including
7 those organized in the form of a partnership, limited
8 liability company, corporation, or association), trust
9 or estate, or a State or political subdivision of a
10 State or other governmental unit.

11 (9) PROGRAM.—The term “Program” means
12 the Terrorism Insured Loss Shared Compensation
13 Program established by this Act.

14 (10) PROPERTY AND CASUALTY INSURANCE.—
15 The term “property and casualty insurance”—

16 (A) means commercial lines of property
17 and casualty insurance;

18 (B) includes personal lines of property and 19 casualty insurance, if a notification is made in 20 accordance with paragraph (6)(B); and

21 (C) does not include—

22 (i) Federal crop insurance issued or
23 reinsured under the Federal Crop Insur-
24 ance Act (7 U.S.C. 1501 et seq.); or

1 (ii) private mortgage insurance, as
2 that term is defined in section 2 of the
3 Homeowners Protection Act of 1998 (12
4 U.S.C. 4901).

5 (11) SECRETARY.—The term “Secretary”
6 means the Secretary of the Treasury.

7 (12) STATE.—The term “State” means any
8 State of the United States, the District of Columbia,
9 the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Common-
10 wealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, American
11 Samoa, Guam, and each of the United States Virgin
12 Islands.

13 (13) UNITED STATES.—The term “United
14 States” means all States of the United States.

15 SEC. 4. TERRORISM INSURED LOSS SHARED COMPENSA-
16 TION PROGRAM.

17 (a) ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM.—

18 (1) IN GENERAL.—There is established in the
19 Department of the Treasury the Terrorism Insured
20 Loss Shared Compensation Program.

21 (2) AUTHORITY OF THE SECRETARY.—Notwith-
22 standing any other provision of State or Federal
23 law, the Secretary shall administer the Program,
24 and shall pay the Federal share of compensation for
25 insured losses in accordance with subsection (e).

1 (b) CONDITIONS FOR FEDERAL PAYMENTS.—No
2 payment may be made by the Secretary under subsection
3 (e), unless—

4 (1) a person that suffers an insured loss, or a
5 person acting on behalf of that person, files a claim
6 with a participating insurance company;

7 (2) the participating insurance company pro-
8 vides clear and conspicuous disclosure to the policy-
9 holder of the premium charged for insured losses
10 covered by the Program and the Federal share of 11 compensation for insured losses under the
12 Program—

13 (A) in the case of any policy covering an
14 insured loss that is issued on or after the date
15 of enactment of this Act, in the policy, at the 16 time of offer, purchase, and renewal of the pol-
17 icy; and

18 (B) in the case of any policy that is issued
19 before the date of enactment of this Act, not
20 later than 90 days after that date of enactment;

21 (3) the participating insurance company proc-
22 esses the claim for the insured loss in accordance
23 with its standard business practices, and any reason-
24 able procedures that the Secretary may prescribe;
25 and

1 (4) the participating insurance company sub-
2 mits to the Secretary, in accordance with such rea-
3 sonable procedures as the Secretary may establish—

4 (A) a claim for payment of the Federal
5 share of compensation for insured losses under
6 the Program;

7 (B) written verification and certification—

8 (i) of the underlying claim; and

9 (ii) of all payments made for insured
10 losses; and

11 (C) certification of its compliance with the 12 provisions of this subsection.

13 (c) MANDATORY PARTICIPATION; MANDATORY
14 AVAILABILITY.—Each insurance company that meets the 15 definition of a participating insurance company under sec-
16 tion 3—

17 (1) shall participate in the Program;

18 (2) shall make available in all of its property
19 and casualty insurance policies (in all of its partici-
20 pating lines), coverage for insured losses; and

21 (3) shall make available property and casualty
22 insurance coverage for insured losses that does not
23 differ materially from the terms, amounts, and other
24 coverage limitations applicable to losses arising from 25 events other than acts of terrorism.

1 (d) PARTICIPATION BY SELF INSURED ENTITIES.—

2 (1) DETERMINATION BY THE SECRETARY.—

3 The Secretary may, in consultation with the NAIC,
4 establish procedures to allow participation in the
5 Program by municipalities and other governmental
6 or quasi-governmental entities (and by any other en-
7 tity, as the Secretary deems appropriate) operating
8 through self insurance arrangements that were in
9 existence on September 11, 2001, but only if the
10 Secretary makes a determination with regard to par-
11 ticipation by any such entity before the occurrence
12 of an act of terrorism in which the entity incurs an
13 insured loss.

14 (2) PARTICIPATION.—If the Secretary makes a
15 determination to allow an entity described in para-
16 graph (1) to participate in the Program, all reports,
17 conditions, requirements, and standards established
18 by this Act for participating insurance companies
19 shall apply to any such entity, as determined to be
20 appropriate by the Secretary.

21 (e) SHARED INSURANCE LOSS COVERAGE.—

22 (1) FEDERAL SHARE.—

23 (A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the cap on
24 liability under paragraph (2) and the limitation
25 under paragraph (6), the Federal share of com-

1 pensation under the Program to be paid by the
2 Secretary for insured losses resulting from an
3 act of terrorism occurring during the period be-
4 ginning on the date of enactment of this Act
5 and ending at midnight on December 31,
6 2002—

7 (i) shall be equal to 80 percent of that
8 portion of the amount of aggregate insured
9 losses that—

10 (I) exceeds the participating in-
11 surance company deductibles required
12 to be paid for those insured losses;
13 and

14 (II) does not exceed
15 $10,000,000,000; and

16 (ii) shall be equal to 90 percent of
17 that portion of the amount of aggregate in-
18 sured losses that—

19 (I) exceeds the participating in-
20 surance company deductibles required
21 to be paid for those insured losses;
22 and

23 (II) exceeds $10,000,000,000.

24 (B) EXTENSION PERIOD.—If the Program
25 is extended in accordance with section 6, the

1 Federal share of compensation under the Pro-
2 gram to be paid by the Secretary for insured
3 losses resulting from an act of terrorism occur-
4 ring during the period beginning on January 1,
5 2003 and ending at midnight on December 31,
6 2003, shall be calculated in accordance with
7 clauses (i) and (ii) of subparagraph (A), subject
8 to the cap on liability in paragraph (2) and the 9 limitation under paragraph (6).

10 (C) PRO RATA SHARE.—If, during the pe-
11 riod described in subparagraph (A) (or during 12 the period described in subparagraph (B), if the
13 Program is extended in accordance with section
14 6), the aggregate insured losses for that period
15 exceed $10,000,000,000, the Secretary shall de-
16 termine the pro rata share for each partici-
17 pating insurance company of the Federal share
18 of compensation for insured losses calculated
19 under subparagraph (A).

20 (2) CAP ON ANNUAL LIABILITY.—Notwith-
21 standing paragraph (1), or any other provision of
22 Federal or State law, if the aggregate insured losses
23 exceed $100,000,000,000 during any period referred
24 to in subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (1)—

1 (A) the Secretary shall not make any pay-
2 ment under this Act for any portion of the
3 amount of such losses that exceeds
4 $100,000,000,000; and

5 (B) participating insurance companies
6 shall not be liable for the payment of any por-
7 tion of the amount that exceeds
8 $100,000,000,000.

9 (3) NOTICE TO CONGRESS.—The Secretary
10 shall notify the Congress if estimated or actual ag-
11 gregate insured losses exceed $100,000,000,000 in 12 any period described in paragraph (1), and the Con-
13 gress shall determine the procedures for and the 14 source of any such excess payments.

15 (4) FINAL NETTING.—The Secretary shall have
16 sole discretion to determine the time at which claims
17 relating to any insured loss or act of terrorism shall 18 become final.

19 (5) DETERMINATIONS FINAL.—Any determina-
20 tion of the Secretary under this subsection shall be
21 final, and shall not be subject to judicial review.

22 (6) IN-FORCE REINSURANCE AGREEMENTS.—
23 For policies covered by reinsurance contracts in 24 force on the date of enactment of this Act, until the 25 in-force reinsurance contract is renewed, amended,

1 or has reached its 1-year anniversary date, any Fed-
2 eral share of compensation due to a participating in-
3 surance company for insured losses during the effec-
4 tive period of the Program shall be shared—

5 (A) with all reinsurance companies to
6 which the participating insurance company has
7 ceded some share of the insured loss pursuant
8 to an in-force reinsurance contract; and

9 (B) in a manner that distributes the Fed-
10 eral share of compensation for insured losses
11 between the participating insurance company
12 and the reinsurance company or companies in 13 the same proportion as the insured losses would 14 have been distributed if the Program did not
15 exist.

16 SEC. 5. GENERAL AUTHORITY AND ADMINISTRATION OF 17 CLAIMS.

18 (a) GENERAL AUTHORITY.—The Secretary shall have
19 the powers and authorities necessary to carry out the Pro-
20 gram, including authority—

21 (1) to investigate and audit all claims under the
22 Program; and

23 (2) to prescribe regulations and procedures to 24 implement the Program.

1 (b) INTERIM RULES AND PROCEDURES.—The Sec-
2 retary shall issue interim final rules or procedures speci-
3 fying the manner in which—

4 (1) participating insurance companies may file,
5 verify, and certify claims under the Program;

6 (2) the Secretary shall publish or otherwise
7 publicly announce the applicable percentage of in-
8 sured losses that is the responsibility of participating
9 insurance companies and the percentage that is the
10 responsibility of the Federal Government under the
11 Program;

12 (3) the Federal share of compensation for in-
13 sured losses will be paid under the Program, includ-
14 ing payments based on estimates of or actual aggre-
15 gate insured losses;

16 (4) the Secretary may, at any time, seek repay-
17 ment from or reimburse any participating insurance
18 company, based on estimates of insured losses under
19 the Program, to effectuate the insured loss sharing
20 provisions contained in section 4;

21 (5) each participating insurance company that
22 incurs insured losses shall pay its pro rata share of 23 insured losses, in accordance with section 4; and

24 (6) the Secretary will determine any final net-
25 ting of payments for actual insured losses under the

1 use of financial resources and enhance the ability of
2 the economy to maintain stability, while responding
3 to a variety of economic, political, environmental,
4 and other risks with a minimum of disruption;

5 (2) the ability of businesses and individuals to
6 obtain property and casualty insurance at reasonable
7 and predictable prices, in order to spread the risk of
8 both routine and catastrophic loss, is critical to eco-
9 nomic growth, urban development, and the construc-
10 tion and maintenance of public and private housing,
11 as well as to the promotion of United States exports
12 and foreign trade in an increasingly interconnected
13 world;

14 (3) the ability of the insurance industry to 15 cover the unprecedented financial risks presented by
16 potential acts of terrorism in the United States can 17 be a major factor in the recovery from terrorist at-18 tacks, while maintaining the stability of the econ-
19 omy;

20 (4) widespread financial market uncertainties
21 have arisen following the terrorist attacks of Sep-
22 tember 11, 2001, including the absence of informa-
23 tion from which financial institutions can make sta-
24 tistically valid estimates of the probability and cost
25 of future terrorist events, and therefore the size,

1 Program, including payments owed to the Federal
2 Government from any participating insurance com-
3 pany and any Federal share of compensation for in-
4 sured losses owed to any participating insurance
5 company, to effectuate the insured loss sharing pro-
6 visions contained in section 4.

7 (c) SUBROGATION RIGHTS.—The United States shall
8 have the right of subrogation with respect to any payment
9 made by the United States under the Program.

10 (d) CONTRACTS FOR SERVICES.—The Secretary may
11 employ persons or contract for services as may be nec-
12 essary to implement the Program.

13 (e) CIVIL PENALTIES.—The Secretary may assess
14 civil money penalties for violations of this Act or any rule,
15 regulation, or order issued by the Secretary under this Act
16 relating to the submission of false or misleading informa-
17 tion for purposes of the Program, or any failure to repay
18 any amount required to be reimbursed under regulations
19 or procedures described in section 5(b). The authority
20 granted under this subsection shall continue during any 21 period in which the Secretary's authority under section
22 6(d) is in effect.

23 SEC. 6. TERMINATION OF PROGRAM; DISCRETIONARY EX-
24 TENSION.

25 (a) TERMINATION OF PROGRAM.—

1 (1) IN GENERAL.—The Program shall termi-
2 nate at midnight on December 31, 2002, unless the
3 Secretary—

4 (A) determines, after considering the re-
5 port and finding required by this section, that
6 the Program should be extended for one addi-
7 tional year, until midnight on December 31,
8 2003; and

9 (B) promptly notifies the Congress of such
10 determination and the reasons therefor.

11 (2) DETERMINATION FINAL.—The determina-
12 tion of the Secretary under paragraph (1) shall be
13 final, and shall not be subject to judicial review.

14 (3) TERMINATION AFTER EXTENSION.—If the
15 Program is extended under paragraph (1), the Pro-
16 gram shall terminate at midnight on December 31,
17 2003.

18 (b) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Not later than 9
19 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Sec-
20 retary shall submit a report to Congress—

21 (1) regarding—

22 (A) the availability of insurance coverage
23 for acts of terrorism;

1 (B) the affordability of such coverage, in-
2 cluding the effect of such coverage on pre-
3 miums; and

4 (C) the capacity of the insurance industry
5 to absorb future losses resulting from acts of
6 terrorism, taking into account the profitability
7 of the insurance industry; and

8 (2) that considers—

9 (A) the impact of the Program on each of
10 the factors described in paragraph (1); and

11 (B) the probable impact on such factors
12 and on the United States economy if the Pro-
13 gram terminates at midnight on December 31,
14 2002.

15 (c) FINDING REQUIRED.—A determination under 16 subsection (a) to extend the Program shall be based on 17 a finding by the Secretary that—

18 (1) widespread market uncertainties con-
19 tinue to disrupt the ability of insurance compa-
20 nies to price insurance coverage for losses re-
21 sulting from acts of terrorism, thereby resulting 22 in the continuing unavailability of affordable in-
23 surance for consumers; and

24 (2) extending the Program for an addi-
25 tional year would likely encourage economic sta-

1 bilization and facilitate a transition to a viable
2 market for private terrorism risk insurance.

3 (d) CONTINUING AUTHORITY TO PAY OR ADJUST
4 COMPENSATION.—Following the termination of the Pro-
5 gram under subsection (a), the Secretary may take such
6 actions as may be necessary to ensure payment, reim-
7 bursement, or adjustment of compensation for insured
8 losses arising out of any act of terrorism occurring during
9 the period in which the Program was in effect under this
10 Act, in accordance with the provisions of section 4 and 11 regulations promulgated thereunder.

12 (e) REPEAL; SAVINGS CLAUSE.—This Act is repealed
13 at midnight on the final termination date of the Program
14 under subsection (a), except that such repeal shall not be
15 construed—

16 (1) to prevent the Secretary from taking, or
17 causing to be taken, such actions under subsection
18 (d) of this section and sections 4(e)(4), 4(e)(5),
19 5(a)(1), 5(c), and 5(e) (as in effect on the day be-20 fore the date of such repeal), and applicable regula-
21 tions promulgated thereunder, during any period in
22 which the authority of the Secretary under sub-
23 section (d) of this section is in effect; or

24 (2) to prevent the availability of funding under
25 section 10(b) during any period in which the author-

1 ity of the Secretary under subsection (d) of this sec-
2 tion is in effect.

3 (f) SENSE OF THE CONGRESS.—It is the sense of the
4 Congress that the Secretary should make any determina-
5 tion under subsection (a) in sufficient time to enable par-
6 ticipating insurance companies to include coverage for acts
7 of terrorism in their policies for 2003.

8 (g) STUDY AND REPORT ON SCOPE OF THE PRO-
9 GRAM.—

10 (1) STUDY.—The Secretary, after consultation
11 with the NAIC, representatives of the insurance in-
12 dustry, and other experts in the insurance field,
13 shall conduct a study of the potential effects of acts
14 of terrorism on the availability of life insurance and 15 other lines of insurance coverage.

16 (2) REPORT.—Not later than 9 months after
17 the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary
18 shall submit a report to the Congress on the results
19 of the study conducted under paragraph (1).

20 (h) REPORTS REGARDING TERRORISM RISK INSUR-
21 ANCE PREMIUMS.—

22 (1) REPORT TO THE NAIC.—Beginning 6
23 months after the date of enactment of this Act, and
24 every 6 months thereafter, each participating insur-
25 ance company shall submit a report to the NAIC

1 that states the premium rates charged by that par-
2 ticipating insurance company during the preceding
3 6-month period for insured losses covered by the
4 Program, and includes an explanation of and jus-
5 tification for those rates.

6 (2) REPORTS FORWARDED.—The NAIC shall
7 promptly forward copies of each report submitted
8 under paragraph (1) to the Secretary, the Secretary
9 of Commerce, the Chairman of the Federal Trade
10 Commission, and the Comptroller General of the 11 United States.

12 (3) AGENCY REPORTS TO CONGRESS.—

13 (A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, the Sec-
14 retary of Commerce, and the Chairman of the 15 Federal Trade Commission shall submit joint
16 reports to Congress and the Comptroller Gen-
17 eral of the United States summarizing and eval-
18 uating the reports forwarded under paragraph 19 (2).

20 (B) TIMING.—The reports required under
21 subparagraph (A) shall be submitted—

22 (i) 9 months after the date of enact-
23 ment of this Act; and

24 (ii) 12 months after the date of sub-
25 mission of the first report under clause (i).

1 (4) GAO EVALUATION AND REPORT.—

2 (A) EVALUATION.—The Comptroller Gen-
3 eral of the United States shall evaluate each re-
4 port submitted under paragraph (3), and upon
5 request, the Secretary, the Secretary of Com-
6 merce, the Chairman of the Federal Trade
7 Commission, and the NAIC shall provide to the
8 Comptroller all documents, records, and any
9 other information that the Comptroller deems
10 necessary to carry out such evaluation.

11 (B) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Not later
12 than 90 days after receipt of each report sub-
13 mitted under paragraph (3), the Comptroller
14 General of the United States shall submit to 15 Congress a report of the evaluation required by
16 subparagraph (A).

17 SEC. 7. PRESERVATION OF STATE LAW.

18 Nothing in this Act shall affect the jurisdiction or 19 regulatory authority of the insurance commissioner (or 20 any agency or office performing like functions) of any 21 State over any participating insurance company or other
22 person—

23 (1) except as specifically provided in this Act;

24 and

25 (2) except that—

1 (A) the definition of the term “act of ter-
2 rorism” in section 3 shall be the exclusive defi-
3 nition of that term for purposes of compensa-
4 tion for insured losses under this Act, and shall
5 preempt any provision of State law that is in-
6 consistent with that definition, to the extent
7 that such provision of law would otherwise
8 apply to any type of insurance covered by this
9 Act;

10 (B) during the period beginning on the 11 date of enactment of this Act and ending at
12 midnight on December 31, 2002, rates for ter-
13 rorism risk insurance covered by this Act and
14 filed with any State shall not be subject to prior 15 approval or a waiting period, under any law of 16 a State that would otherwise be applicable, ex-
17 cept that nothing in this Act affects the ability
18 of any State to invalidate a rate as excessive,
19 inadequate, or unfairly discriminatory; and

20 (C) during the period beginning on the
21 date of enactment of this Act and for so long
22 as the Program is in effect, as provided in sec-
23 tion 6 (including any period during which the 24 authority of the Secretary under section 6(d) is 25 in effect), books and records of any partici-

1 pating insurance company that are relevant to
2 the Program shall be provided, or caused to be
3 provided, to the Secretary or the designee of the 4 Secretary, upon request by the Secretary or
5 such designee, notwithstanding any provision of
6 the laws of any State prohibiting or limiting
7 such access.

8 SEC. 8. SENSE OF THE CONGRESS REGARDING CAPACITY
9 BUILDING.

10 It is the sense of the Congress that the insurance in-
11 dustry should build capacity and aggregate risk to provide
12 affordable property and casualty insurance coverage for
13 terrorism risk.

14 SEC. 9. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS; PAYMENT
15 AUTHORITY.

16 (a) ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES.—There are author-
17 ized to be appropriated to the Secretary, out of funds in 18 the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as
19 may be necessary for administrative expenses of the Pro-
20 gram, to remain available until expended.

21 (b) PAYMENT AUTHORITY.—This Act constitutes
22 payment authority in advance of appropriation Acts, and
23 represents the obligation of the Federal Government to 24 provide for the Federal share of compensation for insured
25 losses under the Program.

1 SEC. 10. PROCEDURES FOR CIVIL ACTIONS.

2 (a) FEDERAL CAUSE OF ACTION.—

3 (1) IN GENERAL.—There shall exist a Federal
4 cause of action for property damage, personal injury,
5 or death arising out of or resulting from an act of
6 terrorism, which shall be the exclusive cause of ac-
7 tion and remedy for claims for such property dam-
8 age, personal injury, or death, except as provided in
9 subsection (d).

10 (2) PREEMPTION OF STATE ACTIONS.—All
11 State causes of action of any kind for property dam-
12 age, personal injury, or death arising out of or re-
13 sulting from an act of terrorism that are otherwise
14 available under State law, are hereby preempted, ex-
15 cept as provided in subsection (d).

16 (b) GOVERNING LAW.—The substantive law for deci-
17 sion in an action described in subsection (a)(1) shall be
18 derived from the law, including applicable choice of law
19 principles, of the State in which the act of terrorism giving
20 rise to the action occurred, except to the extent that—

21 (1) the law, including choice of law principles,
22 of another State is determined to be applicable to 23 the action by the district court hearing the action;
24 or

25 (2) otherwise applicable State law (including 26 that determined pursuant to paragraph (1)), is in-

1 funding, and allocation of the risk of loss caused by
2 such acts of terrorism;

3 (5) a decision by property and casualty insurers
4 to deal with such uncertainties, either by termi-
5 nating property and casualty coverage for losses
6 arising from terrorist events, or by radically esca-
7 lating premium coverage to compensate for risks of
8 loss that are not readily predictable, could seriously
9 hamper ongoing and planned construction, property
10 acquisition, and other business projects, generate a
11 dramatic increase in rents, and otherwise suppress
12 economic activity; and

13 (6) the United States Government should pro-
14 vide temporary financial compensation to insured
15 parties, contributing to the stabilization of the 16 United States economy in a time of national crisis,
17 while the financial services industry develops the sys-
18 tems, mechanisms, products, and programs nec-
19 essary to create a viable financial services market for 20 private terrorism risk insurance.

21 (b) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this Act is to estab-
22 lish a temporary Federal program that provides for a
23 transparent system of shared public and private com-
24 pensation for insured losses resulting from acts of ter-
25 rorism, in order to—

1 consistent with or otherwise preempted by Federal
2 law.

3 (c) PUNITIVE DAMAGES.—Any amounts awarded in
4 a civil action described in subsection (a)(1) that are attrib-
5 utable to punitive damages shall not count as insured
6 losses for purposes of this Act.

7 (d) CLAIMS AGAINST TERRORISTS.—Nothing in this
8 section shall in any way be construed to limit the ability
9 of any plaintiff to seek any form of recovery from any per-
10 son, government, or other entity that was a participant
11 in, or aider and abettor of, any act of terrorism.

12 (e) EFFECTIVE PERIOD.—This section shall apply
13 only to actions described in subsection (a)(1) arising out
14 of or resulting from acts of terrorism that occur during
15 the effective period of the Program, including, if applica-
16 ble, any extension period provided for under section 6.

1 (1) protect consumers by addressing market
2 disruptions and ensure the continued widespread
3 availability and affordability of property and cas-
4 ualty insurance for terrorism risk; and

5 (2) allow for a transitional period for the pri-
6 vate markets to stabilize, resume pricing of such in-
7 surance, and build capacity to absorb any future
8 losses, while preserving State insurance regulation
9 and consumer protections.

10 SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

11 In this Act, the following definitions shall apply:

12 (1) ACT OF TERRORISM.—

13 (A) CERTIFICATION.—The term “act of 14 terrorism” means any act that is certified by 15 the Secretary, in concurrence with the Sec-
16 retary of State, and the Attorney General of the 17 United States—

18 (i) to be a violent act or an act that 19 is dangerous to—

20 (I) human life;

21 (II) property; or

22 (III) infrastructure;

23 (ii) to have resulted in damage within
24 the United States, or outside the United

1 States in the case of an air carrier de-
2 scribed in paragraph (3)(A)(ii); and

3 (iii) to have been committed by an in-
4 dividual or individuals acting on behalf of
5 any foreign person or foreign interest, as
6 part of an effort to coerce the civilian pop-
7 ulation of the United States or to influence
8 the policy or affect the conduct of the 9 United States Government by coercion.

10 (B) LIMITATION.—No act or event shall be
11 certified by the Secretary as an act of terrorism
12 if—

13 (i) the act or event is committed in
14 the course of a war declared by the Con-
15 gress; or

16 (ii) losses resulting from the act or
17 event, in the aggregate, do not exceed
18 $5,000,000.

19 (C) DETERMINATIONS FINAL.—Any certifi-
20 cation of, or determination not to certify, an act
21 or event as an act of terrorism under this para-
22 graph shall be final, and shall not be subject to
23 judicial review.

24 (2) BUSINESS INTERRUPTION COVERAGE.—The
25 term “business interruption coverage”—

1 (A) means coverage of losses for temporary
2 relocation expenses and ongoing expenses, in-
3 cluding ordinary wages, where—

4 (i) there is physical damage to the
5 business premises of such magnitude that
6 the business cannot open for business;

7 (ii) there is physical damage to other
8 property that totally prevents customers or
9 employees from gaining access to the busi-
10 ness premises; or

11 (iii) the Federal, State, or local gov-
12 ernment shuts down an area due to phys-
13 ical or environmental damage, thereby pre-
14 venting customers or employees from gain-
15 ing access to the business premises; and

16 (B) does not include lost profits, other
17 than in the case of a small business concern (as
18 defined in section 3 of the Small Business Act
19 (15 U.S.C. 632) and applicable regulations
20 thereunder) in any case described in clause (i),
21 (ii), or (iii) of subparagraph (A).

1 (3) INSURED LOSS.—The term “insured loss”—

2 (A) means any loss resulting from an act
3 of terrorism that is covered by primary property
4 and casualty insurance, including business
5 interruption coverage, issued by a participating
6 insurance company, if such loss—

7 (i) occurs within the United States; or

8 (ii) occurs to an air carrier (as de-
9 fined in section 40102 of title 49, United
10 States Code) or to a United States flag
11 vessel (or a vessel based principally in the 12 United States, on which United States in-
13 come tax is paid and whose insurance cov-
14 erage is subject to regulation in the United
15 States), regardless of where the loss oc-
16 curs; and

17 (B) excludes coverage under any life or 18 health insurance.

19 (4) MARKET SHARE.—

20 (A) IN GENERAL.—The “market share” of
21 a participating insurance company shall be cal-
22 culated using the total amount of direct written
23 property and casualty insurance premiums for 24 the participating insurance company during the
25 2-year period preceding the year in which the

1 subject act of terrorism occurred (or during
2 such other period for which adequate data are
3 available, as determined by the Secretary), as a
4 percentage of the aggregate of all such property
5 and casualty insurance premiums industry-wide
6 during that period.

7 (B) ADJUSTMENTS.—The Secretary may
8 adjust the market share of a participating in-
9 surance company under subparagraph (A), as
10 necessary to reflect current market participa-
11 tion of that participating insurance company.

12 (5) NAIC.—The term “NAIC” means the Na-
13 tional Association of Insurance Commissioners.

14 (6) PARTICIPATING INSURANCE COMPANY.—
15 The term “participating insurance company” means
16 any insurance company, including any subsidiary or
17 affiliate thereof—

18 (A) that—

19 (i) is licensed or admitted to engage
20 in the business of providing primary insur-
21 ance in any State, and was so licensed or
22 admitted on September 11, 2001; or

23 (ii) is not licensed or admitted as de-
24 scribed in clause (i), if it is an eligible sur-
25 plus line carrier listed on the Quarterly

1 Listing of Alien Insurers of the NAIC, or
2 any successor thereto;

3 (B) that receives direct premiums for any
4 type of commercial property and casualty insur-
5 ance coverage or that, not later than 21 days
6 after the date of enactment of this Act, submits
7 written notification to the Secretary of its in-
8 tent to participate in the Program with regard
9 to personal lines of property and casualty insur-
10 ance; and

11 (C) that meets any other criteria that the
12 Secretary may reasonably prescribe.

13 (7) PARTICIPATING INSURANCE COMPANY DE-
14 DUCTIBLE.—The term “participating insurance com-
15 pany deductible” means—

16 (A) a participating insurance company’s
17 market share, multiplied by $10,000,000,000,
18 with respect to insured losses resulting from an
19 act of terrorism occurring during the period be-
20 ginning on the date of enactment of this Act
21 and ending at midnight on December 31, 2002;
22 and

23 (B) a participating insurance company’s
24 market share, multiplied by $15,000,000,000,
25 with respect to insured losses resulting from an

Libby referred me to you.

Ari is going on a trip at the end of May. He is flying up to White Plains, NY to do a keynote speech for the Westchester County Association (still need to have approved). He then is going to fly from White Plains probably on Friday morning and hook up with the President for his commencement speech to West Point. He then will leave on Friday and travel to Middlebury, VT for a college reunion. He will then return home on Sunday. Who should pay for what?

Alternative would be to make Hertling aware and have him ask to attend. It is more diff for them to turn Thompson down directly.

Comments Of Sen. Patrick Leahy,
Chairman, Senate Judiciary Committee,
On Assertions Made
About The Nomination Of Miguel Estrada

April 10, 2002

Today a few interest groups and Republican Senators chose to criticize the Democratic members of the Judiciary Committee because one of President Bush's nominees has not yet been formally scheduled for a hearing.

To contend that Mr. Estrada, a young attorney with no judicial experience, is the only Hispanic who could be a nominee to a potential vacancy on the Supreme Court of the United States does a disservice to the many outstanding Hispanic judges serving in our federal and state courts.

The Republican campaign to paint a picture of unfairness in the handling of this or other judicial nominees is pure partisan bunk that is flatly refuted by

REV_00143015

the record.

Most offensive of all is the insinuation that Mr. Estrada has been treated unfairly and that his Hispanic heritage is the reason.

Let's look for a moment at the comparative record on diversity in the federal courts.

It is Democrats who have long championed diversity in the federal courts. Seeking diversity on the bench is the principal characteristic of President Bill Clinton's work in filling judicial vacancies, and it is a proud legacy that Democrats in the Senate have worked hard to sustain.

It was Senate Democrats who fought for four years to convince Republicans to finally allow a vote on Richard Paez' nomination for the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals.

It was Democrats who pushed for more than a year for a vote on the nomination of Sonia Sotomayor for the Second Circuit.

It was Senate Democrats who fought for Judge Ronnie White, who Republicans defeated on a party-line vote.

It is Democrats who have already led the way to the confirmation of three of President Bush's Hispanic judicial nominees.

Hispanic Americans and all Americans have a stake in deciding who is selected and confirmed to sit on our courts, and especially to the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals, which sets law affecting all Americans. The D.C. Circuit is in a position to decide how clean our water and air will be, how safe our workplaces will be, and how our civil rights and voting rights laws will be enforced.

Despite their record in blocking not one but several nominees to this very same federal circuit court, Senate Republicans asked for a pledge of a hearing on the Estrada nomination. In January, as part of the good-faith steps that Democrats have taken to repair the damage done over the last six years by Republican inaction on so many nominees - and especially, so many nominees to the D.C. Circuit - I gave that pledge. Certainly the Republican senators who made statements today are aware of that announcement.

Republicans refused to act on more than 50 of President Clinton's nominations that they deemed controversial. Democrats are giving hearings and votes even to controversial nominees.

President Clinton appointed 23 Hispanic Americans to federal judgeships. Unfortunately the Republican-led Senate killed the nominations of Jorge Rangel, Enrique Moreno, Ricardo Morado, Christine Arguello and Anabelle Rodriguez through inaction.

Since the change in majority last summer, we have proceeded to confirm Christina Armijo, Philip Martinez and Randy Crane to federal judgeships in New Mexico and Texas.

The Republicans' strategy has been to create a vacancy crisis, by refusing to act on earlier nominations to the courts, and then to point fingers to try to shift the blame.

Democrats inherited these vacancies, and Democrats have turned the trend around by restoring steadiness to the hearing process and by confirming, in just nine months, 42 judicial nominees. We have made the process more open, and we have ended the era of secret holds.

The partisanship and politicization of the judicial nominations process was made clear again today by Republican Senators who referred to nominees' political ideology as a principal credential. I have urged the Administration to work with the Senate to fill judicial vacancies with consensus nominees who will make fair-minded judges rather than to pursue an ideologically driven court-packing agenda.

I signed/approved the blue sheet for that event some time ago. I might suggest you contact Kim Douglas in Room 1, who probably will know current status. Thanks. And definitely call me if you need any help running this down.

Yes - I've gotten two or three calls on this myself. They understand that this can not be distributed.

Subject: Wheaties Box

Brett--

Though we spoke about this, everyone really likes the idea of doing the Wheaties Box with the President. The idea is ONE Wheaties gift box with the President's action-shot image to be presented to the him privately. Apparently, they did this for former President Bush. Your direction on this one more time...

Brett,

I know that you were at the Hill, but have you had a chance to review the Talking points for Tax Day. It was due at 11 AM.

Thanks,

Moose--Larry is planning on going to New York for a RNC sponsered event. He has a friend in New York that invited him to stay at his house rather than get a hotel room (his private residence.) This friend that he would like to stay with is also having the RNC event at his house. Is that alright with you and counsel's office?

Brett, I spoke with Jock and he thought that these circumstances would indicated that I do not need to complete the 13 page questionnaire. Do you concur? Also, Virginia Neumann, also in my office, falls under these same circumstances. Please let us know if we need to stop by to complete a new form to indicate this change. Thanks, Brooks Bash

Brett,
I initially responded that I had access to the Holy Land information, but as I review the Email that I received, I note that the Email containing information was sent to me at 7:21 a.m. on December 4. I believe the initial inquiry asked whether I had access before December 4. I have received your letter with the questionnaire--do I need to complete it? Do I need to complete a new form to replace the previous one I submitted. Please let me know. Thanks, Brooks Bash x69466.

Open House at the EEOB Library

Wednesday, April 17, 2002
1 p.m.) 3 p.m.
Room 308 EEOB

Do you know how to

-) track an issue in the news, using the e-mail alert feature?
-) search public records databases to verify names, addresses, and more?
-) use the recent enhancements to the lexis.com service?
-) track pending legislation, locate committee hearing transcripts, find historic presidential documents?

Our LexisNexis representative, Cindy Sullivan, and research consultant, Maggie Huber, will be on hand to answer your questions, provide search tips, do informal training, and hear your wish list for future LexisNexis enhancements. Please join us!

Light refreshments will be provided.

Contact Martha Schiele (x57000) with any questions, or to request WAVES clearance.

Open House at the EEOB Library

Wednesday, April 17, 2002
1 p.m.) 3 p.m.
Room 308 EEOB

Do you know how to

-) track an issue in the news, using the e-mail alert feature?
-) search public records databases to verify names, addresses, and more?
-) use the recent enhancements to the lexis.com service?
-) track pending legislation, locate committee hearing transcripts, find historic presidential documents?

Our LexisNexis representative, Cindy Sullivan, and research consultant, Maggie Huber, will be on hand to answer your questions, provide search tips, do informal training, and hear your wish list for future LexisNexis enhancements. Please join us!

Light refreshments will be provided.

Contact Martha Schiele (x57000) with any questions, or to request WAVES clearance.

These actually were prepared in draft form by our Office last July. I do not understand what the current issue is. Someone please call me to explain. 6-7984.

[Please disregard if you have copies of this already.] As many of you know, Ann McFeathers' Pittsburgh Post-Gazette NOW story last week was written without input from either DOJ or the WH. Following complaints logged with her editors by Viet and I, they did print yesterday a story based on some of my comments. It does not show up on their online website, and while they apparently published this instead of the correction we had hoped for, I thought you should have an electronic version FYI for your constituencies if you haven't seen. Thanks, take care. MMG

"Justice Defends Judge on Gun Club" Pittsburgh Post-Gazette
April 10, 2002 (A8)

The US Department of Justice is defending U.S. District Judge D.
Brooks Smith's handling of his one-time membership in an all-male gun club against charges by the National Organization of Women's Pennsylvania chapter that Smith violated the judicial code of ethics.

Smith has been nominated by President Bush for the 3rd U.S.
Circuit Court of Appeals, and Pennsylvania NOW last week came out in opposition to Smith's elevation in part because of how he dealt with his Spuce Creek Rod and Gun Club membership.

Smith told the Senate in 1988, before he was confirmed as a district judge, that he would try to change the club's all-male policy to resign, which he did in 1999. Pennsylvania NOW said Smtih violated judicial ethics by remaining in an organization that practiced discrimination for more than two years after attempting to change its policy.

Monica Goodling, senior counsel in the Justice Department's Office of Public Affairs, said Smith did try to change the club's policy but was not obliged to resign because the club was purely social -- an exemption provided for in the Code of Judicial Conduct. The two-year limit on membership therefore does not apply either and, in any case, was not in effect when Smith was confirmed as a district judge in 1988, she said.

"Judge Smith has a long record supporting equality for women and combating domestic violence and has been endosed without reservation" by various women's groups, including the Women's Bar Association of Western Pennsylvania, Goodling added.

NOW contends that the Spruce Creek club provides important business contacts for its members and thus does fall under the judicial code's prohibition on membership organizations that discriminate.

At my monthly Airlift Ops briefings, I have been repeatedly asked by Airlift Ops for finalized policies -- they only have drafts. My request to Kim to locate the memos and prepare them for signature has prompted this discussion. I agree with Brett, we should continue to follow the procedures as outlined, I only want those procedures to be finalized. Brett - to my knowledge, there are no issues with those procedures other than they have been given to Airlift Ops as "draft".

Sorry, for all the confusion.

Thanks.

I think they are not the same. For Presidential travel, Airlift Ops should follow the procedures they have been following since last year. If there is some issue with those procedures, Cathy or Kim, please bring it to my attention. (I remain unsure of what has prompted this discussion other than someone inserting Courtney's name into some draft document, thereby prompting her understandable confusion.)

Ari is going on a trip at the end of May. He is flying up to White Plains, NY to do a keynote speech for the Westchester County Association (still need to have approved). He then is going to fly from White Plains probably on Friday morning and hook up with the President for his commencement speech to West Point. He then will leave on Friday and travel to Middlebury, VT for a college reunion. He will then return home on Sunday. Who should pay for what?

Here is the latest (and hopefully final) draft. Changes are bolded. We still have concerns about some of the additional language but in the interest of closure and to reach consensus, we will agree to it at the present time.

In addition, given the short amount of time available, we plan to circulate this draft with the representation that it has been approved by both Ashcroft and Bush. Let me know if this presents any problems.

JOINT RESOLUTION

Proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to protect the rights of crime victims.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein),

That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid for all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, and which shall take effect on the 180th day after ratification of this article:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. The rights of victims of violent crime, being capable of protection without denying the constitutional rights of those accused of victimizing them, are hereby established and shall not be denied by any State or the United States and may be restricted only as provided in this article.

"SECTION 2. A victim of violent crime shall have the right to reasonable and timely notice of any public proceeding involving the crime and of any release or escape of the accused; the rights not to be excluded from such public proceeding and reasonably to be heard at public release, plea, sentencing, reprieve, and pardon proceedings; and the right to decisions in such public proceeding that duly consider the victim's safety, interest in avoiding unreasonable delay, and just and timely claims to restitution from the offender. These rights shall not be restricted except when and to the degree dictated by a substantial interest in public safety or the administration of criminal justice, or by compelling necessity.

"SECTION 3. Nothing in this article shall be construed to provide grounds for a new trial or to authorize any claim for damages. Only the victim or the victim's lawful representative may assert the rights established by this article, and no person accused of the crime may obtain any form of relief hereunder.

"SECTION 4. Congress shall have power to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of this article. Nothing in this article shall affect the President's authority to grant reprieves or pardons.

"SECTION 5. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission to the States by the Congress."

RE: FEDERAL ROLE IN THE AVIATION TERRORISM INSURANCE MARKET

Background

Aviation Insurance provides three primary types of insurance, under a variety of different circumstances:

- 1) Insurance for the loss of the airplane, referred to as hull insurance.
- 2) Insurance for losses suffered by the passengers on that plane.
- 3) Insurance for losses caused to other people and property.

Broadly speaking, we can define this insurance as being provided under three circumstances:

- 1) For losses incurred during normal peacetime operations.
- 2) For losses incurred in times of war.
- 3) For losses incurred from acts of terrorism.

The private insurance market currently functions well for all three perils during both peace and war. Moreover, during war it imposes important discipline on the carriers by virtue of the fact that the coverage is cancelable on short notice. This allows the insurance to be appropriately re-priced to reflect the higher risk and provides the carriers a limited window during which they can remove their vulnerable assets from the war zone.

The insurance market even operates quite efficiently when the threat is terrorism. Although terrorism can pose a worldwide threat, making it impossible to relocate assets to a safe haven, the market has shown that it can price the risk for hull and passenger losses as these are known risks – maximum loss is limited to the value of the plane and the number of passengers it carries times the average compensation paid those passengers. The problem arises in liability for third party losses from acts of terrorism. The most notable such example is the loss of life in the World Trade Center attack.

Staff recommends that any action we take acknowledge that the insurance market has shown itself well capable of providing coverage for all other perils in all other circumstances and should be allowed to operate as it historically has. Thus, the only open issue is how to deal with third party losses resulting from an act of terrorism.

The policy question before the Administration is what role, if any, the federal government should continue to play in the market for aviation insurance against terrorist events.

Current State of the Market

Prior to the attacks of 9/11, airlines were paying approximately 5 cents a passenger to secure $1.5 billion of insurance coverage against all perils. That cost has since risen to $1.25 per passenger, with a limitation of $50 million in third party losses.

Immediately after the terrorist attacks of 9/11, private insurers invoked cancellation clauses in their policies, leaving airlines without coverage. The Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act authorized the federal government to provide insurance coverage. The Act capped third party liability at $100 million, and the FAA agreed to provide coverage above the first $50 million of losses for a charge of $7.50 per takeoff, approximately 8 cents per passenger. While the liability cap expired on March 20, the Secretary of Transportation extended the FAA insurance element for 60 days.

A private insurance consortium, headed by AIG, has expressed strong interest in providing this insurance coverage to the airline industry. This would provide $1b in third party coverage. The price initially quoted was $1.85 per passenger, although market pressures may, over time, serve to attenuate that price. This offer of coverage, like the coverage which was offered prior to 9/11, would be cancelable at the discretion of the insurer, possibly forcing us to again revisit this issue in the future should another event occur.

At the same time, the airline industry is advancing a concept they refer to as Equitime. This would be a risk retention group that would provide insurance services to the industry. Starting this venture would require a medium term commitment to provide reinsurance through the federal government. Equitime is intended to provide coverage not just for the third party losses from terrorism but for all the industry's insurance needs.

It is important to note that neither the private insurance market nor the Equitime solution will cover all losses from a large event. Private aviation insurance from the 9/11 attack was approximately $6-8 billion. The Stabilization Act directly spent $40 billion in addition to establishing an open-ended Victim's Compensation Fund that could cost another $5-6 billion. A federal financial role will clearly exist in the wake of another incident.

Recommendation From Principals

A consensus was reached at the first Principals meeting that the appropriate solution was to limit third party liability from acts of terrorism. This was accompanied by the recognition that only legislative action could achieve this goal and that such action was unlikely in the current session of Congress. This requires that decisions be made on how to meet insurance needs of the industry in the medium term.

Decisions Required by Principals

1) Should we seek legislative action in the next Congress to limit third party liability from acts of terrorism?

Discussion: This decision may be premature and it may be desirable to await the conclusion of congressional action on the broader terrorism insurance bill. Note that the coverage limits in the bill under discussion in the Congress call for private insurance coverage of the first $10 billion of an event and that this far exceeds the coverage the airlines formerly carried or feel they could afford to carry today. Thus direct action on the aviation insurance question may still be necessary even with the passage of a broader terrorism bill.

2) On March 20th, The Department of Transportation extended for 60 days the third party liability insurance it offers through the FAA. Upon expiration of those 60 days should we:

- Exit market immediately and let airlines obtain private coverage.
- Keep existing FAA program in place but gradually transition out of the market by raising premiums and/or increasing the “deductible.”
- Keep existing FAA program in place “as is” for a period of time.
- Explicitly back the airline industry Equitime proposal.

Discussion: This is the most difficult and contentious issue. The arguments fall into three camps summarized below:

Costs of Terrorism are a social cost: If one subscribes to the view that the costs of terrorist acts should be borne by society as a whole then that goal can be met by continuing to provide the insurance through the FAA and providing it at below market rates while we attempt to limit liability.

Market Failure: If the goal is to ensure that insurance is available and one does not believe the private insurance market will or can properly price the product, then the case can be made for either advancing alternate vehicles (e.g., Equitime) or providing the insurance through the Federal Government and attempting to price it at the “appropriate” rate. A market failure position is also consistent with a continuation of the existing FAA insurance program with the cost of that insurance increased either in response to market conditions or in a pre-defined phased-in path to increase market performance.

Private Markets as the Optimal Solution: If the goal is to foster market participation then we should promptly announce our intention to exit the direct provision of insurance and make clear that we will not subsidize Equitime.

- 4) If an endorsement is made of the Equitime proposal should that endorsement, with its attendant federal role as a reinsurer, should that endorsement be:
- As a reinsurer to the full Equitime proposal
 - Limited so as not to subsidize competition for that portion of the insurance market which is functioning properly—i.e., provide support only for third party losses from acts of terrorism.
 - Only provide reinsurance to Equitime if we provide reinsurance on these same terms to other private parties.

Discussion: Equitime is a very major intrusion into the operation of private insurance markets. It would provide one entity preferred status in the market by virtue of its federal support and it would provide federal subsidies for the replacement of a private market in those parts of the insurance market which are working well. The staff recommendation is that any Equitime endorsement be limited to the third party liability issue and be conditioned on providing comparable reinsurance to all parties seeking to compete against Equitime.

Prior to the attacks of 9/11, airlines were paying approximately 5 cents a passenger to secure $1.5 billion of insurance coverage against all perils. (This 5 cents number makes me nervous – this is Delta’s estimate, right? Can we get any independent verification of pre 9/11 costs. My take is that TOTAL insurance costs rose 2-3 times, not 25-fold has this would imply). That cost has since risen to $1.25 per passenger, with a limitation of $50 million in third party losses.

Immediately after the terrorist attacks of 9/11, private insurers invoked cancellation clauses in their policies, leaving airlines without coverage. The Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act authorized the federal government to provide insurance coverage. The Act capped third party liability at $100 million, and the FAA agreed to provide coverage above the first $50 million of losses for a charge of $7.50 per takeoff, approximately 8 cents per passenger. The price initially quoted was $1.85 per passenger, although market pressures may, over time, serve to attenuate that price. This offer of coverage, like the coverage which was offered prior to 9/11, would be cancelable at the discretion of the insurer, possibly forcing us to again revisit this issue in the future should another event occur. It is important to note that it is difficult to assess the actual premium costs that would arise in a private market, as the presence of the FAA in this market has limited the ability of the private market to provide accurate price quotes. Based on international experience, however, it is reasonable to assume that AIG would be willing to provide third party coverage at a rate substantially less than $1.85. In the UK, AIG has agreed to provide such coverage for only 75 cents per passenger, subject to a maximum industry exposure of $2 billion.

At the same time, the airline industry is advancing a captive insurer concept they refer to as Equitime. This would be a risk retention group that would provide insurance services to the industry. The airlines believe that starting this venture would require a medium term commitment for the federal government to provide excess-of-loss coverage reinsurance through the federal government. Equitime is intended to provide coverage not just for the third party losses from terrorism but for all the industry’s insurance needs.

It is important to note that neither the private insurance market nor the Equitime solution will cover all losses from a large event. Private aviation insurance from the 9/11 attack was approximately $6-8 billion. The Stabilization Act directly spent $40 billion in addition to establishing an open-ended Victim’s Compensation Fund that could cost another $5-6 billion. A federal financial role will clearly exist in the wake of another incident. (This paragraph does not seem needed. It seems to confuse aviation versus other forms of insurance, etc.)

Recommendation From Principals

A consensus was reached at the first Principals meeting that the appropriate solution was to limit third party liability from acts of terrorism. This was accompanied by the recognition that only legislative action could achieve this goal and that such action was unlikely in the current session of Congress. This requires that decisions be made on how to meet insurance needs of the industry in the medium term.

1) Should we seek legislative action in the next Congress to limit third party liability from acts of terrorism?

Discussion: This decision may be premature and it may be desirable to await the conclusion of congressional action on the broader terrorism insurance bill. Note that the coverage limits in the bill under discussion in the Congress cover all property and casualty losses (not just those for aviation) and call for private insurance coverage of the first $10 billion of an event. ~~and that~~ This far exceeds the coverage the airlines formerly carried or feel they could afford to carry today. It is an open question whether ~~Thus~~ direct action on the aviation insurance question may still be necessary even with the passage of a broader terrorism bill.

2) On March 20th, The Department of Transportation extended for 60 days the third party liability insurance it offers through the FAA. Upon expiration of those 60 days should we:

- Exit market immediately and let airlines obtain private coverage.
- Keep existing FAA program in place but gradually transition out of the market by raising premiums and/or increasing the “deductible.”
- Keep existing FAA program in place “as is” ~~for a period of time~~ while pursuing liability limitations.
- Explicitly back the airline industry Equitime proposal.

Discussion: This is the most difficult and contentious issue. ~~The arguments fall into three camps~~ are summarized below: (This discussion should be in the same order as the options listed above. And the “camps” should map to the four options. Currently, a government phase-out is linked to Equitime, but it could also be linked to phase to private markets.)

Immediate Private Market Solution: If the goal is to provide appropriate incentives for the private sector to mitigate the risk and cost of future terrorist attacks, then a well-functioning private insurance market is best able to do this. Thus, we should announce our intention to exit the direct provision of insurance and make clear that we will not subsidize Equitime.

Gradually phase to a private market solution: Keep existing FAA program in place but gradually transition out of the market by raising premiums and/or increasing the “deductible.” This approach seeks to strike a balance between the desire for private sector risk mitigation incentives, and the recognition that, in the short-run, private insurers may not be able to provide coverage above $1 billion.

Formatted

Costs of Terrorism are a social cost: If one subscribes to the view that the costs of terrorist acts should be borne by society as a whole then that goal can be met by continuing to provide the insurance through the FAA and providing it a below market rates while we attempt to limit liability.

RE: FEDERAL ROLE IN THE AVIATION TERRORISM INSURANCE MARKET

Background

Aviation Insurance provides three primary types of insurance, under a variety of different circumstances:

- 1) Insurance for the loss of the airplane, referred to as hull insurance.
- 2) Insurance for losses suffered by the passengers on that plane.
- 3) Insurance for losses caused to other people and property.

Broadly speaking, we can define this insurance as being provided under three circumstances:

- 1) For losses incurred during normal peacetime operations.
- 2) For losses incurred in times of war.
- 3) For losses incurred from acts of terrorism.

The private insurance market currently functions well for all three perils during both peace and war. Moreover, during war it imposes important discipline on the carriers by virtue of the fact that the coverage is cancelable on short notice. This allows the insurance to be appropriately re-priced to reflect the higher risk and provides the carriers a limited window during which they can remove their vulnerable assets from the war zone.

The insurance market even operates quite efficiently when the threat is terrorism. Although terrorism can pose a worldwide threat, making it impossible to relocate assets to a safe haven, the market has shown that it can price the risk for hull and passenger losses as these are known risks – maximum loss is limited to the value of the plane and the number of passengers it carries times the average compensation paid those passengers. The problem arises in liability for third party losses from acts of terrorism. The most notable such example is the loss of life in the World Trade Center attack.

Staff recommends that any action we take acknowledge that the insurance market has shown itself well capable of providing coverage for all other perils in all other circumstances and should be allowed to operate as it historically has. Thus, the only open issue is how to deal with third party losses resulting from an act of terrorism.

The policy question before the Administration is what role, if any, the federal government should continue to play in the market for aviation insurance against terrorist events.

Current State of the Market

Prior to the attacks of 9/11, airlines were paying approximately 5 cents a passenger to secure $1.5 billion of insurance coverage against all perils. That cost has since risen to $1.25 per passenger, with a limitation of $50 million in third party losses.

Immediately after the terrorist attacks of 9/11, private insurers invoked cancellation clauses in their policies, leaving airlines without coverage. The Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act authorized the federal government to provide insurance coverage. The Act capped third party liability at $100 million, and the FAA agreed to provide coverage above the first $50 million of losses for a charge of $7.50 per takeoff, approximately 8 cents per passenger. While the liability cap expired on March 20, the Secretary of Transportation extended the FAA insurance element for 60 days.

A private insurance consortium, headed by AIG, has expressed strong interest in providing this insurance coverage to the airline industry. This would provide $1b in third party coverage. The price initially quoted was $1.85 per passenger, although market pressures may, over time, serve to attenuate that price. This offer of coverage, like the coverage which was offered prior to 9/11, would be cancelable at the discretion of the insurer, possibly forcing us to again revisit this issue in the future should another event occur.

At the same time, the airline industry is advancing a concept they refer to as Equitime. This would be a risk retention group that would provide insurance services to the industry. Starting this venture would require a medium term commitment to provide reinsurance through the federal government. Equitime is intended to provide coverage not just for the third party losses from terrorism but for all the industry's insurance needs.

It is important to note that neither the private insurance market nor the Equitime solution will cover all losses from a large event. Private aviation insurance from the 9/11 attack was approximately $6-8 billion. The Stabilization Act directly spent $40 billion in addition to establishing an open-ended Victim's Compensation Fund that could cost another $5-6 billion. A federal financial role will clearly exist in the wake of another incident.

Recommendation From Principals

A consensus was reached at the first Principals meeting that the appropriate solution was to limit third party liability from acts of terrorism. This was accompanied by the recognition that only legislative action could achieve this goal and that such action was unlikely in the current session of Congress. This requires that decisions be made on how to meet insurance needs of the industry in the medium term.

Decisions Required by Principals

1) Should we seek legislative action in the next Congress to limit third party liability from acts of terrorism?

Discussion: This decision may be premature and it may be desirable to await the conclusion of congressional action on the broader terrorism insurance bill. Note that the coverage limits in the bill under discussion in the Congress call for private insurance coverage of the first $10 billion of an event and that this far exceeds the coverage the airlines formerly carried or feel they could afford to carry today. Thus direct action on the aviation insurance question may still be necessary even with the passage of a broader terrorism bill.

2) On March 20th, The Department of Transportation extended for 60 days the third party liability insurance it offers through the FAA. Upon expiration of those 60 days should we:

- Exit market immediately and let airlines obtain private coverage.
- Keep existing FAA program in place but gradually transition out of the market by raising premiums and/or increasing the “deductible.”
- Keep existing FAA program in place “as is” for a period of time.
- Explicitly back the airline industry Equitime proposal.

Discussion: This is the most difficult and contentious issue. The arguments fall into three camps summarized below:

Costs of Terrorism are a social cost: If one subscribes to the view that the costs of terrorist acts should be borne by society as a whole then that goal can be met by continuing to provide the insurance through the FAA and providing it at below market rates while we attempt to limit liability.

Market Failure: If the goal is to ensure that insurance is available and one does not believe the private insurance market will or can properly price the product, then the case can be made for either advancing alternate vehicles (e.g., Equitime) or providing the insurance through the Federal Government and attempting to price it at the “appropriate” rate. A market failure position is also consistent with a continuation of the existing FAA insurance program with the cost of that insurance increased either in response to market conditions or in a pre-defined phased-in path to increase market performance.

Private Markets as the Optimal Solution: If the goal is to foster market participation then we should promptly announce our intention to exit the direct provision of insurance and make clear that we will not subsidize Equitime.

- 4) If an endorsement is made of the Equitime proposal should that endorsement, with its attendant federal role as a reinsurer, should that endorsement be:
- As a reinsurer to the full Equitime proposal
 - Limited so as not to subsidize competition for that portion of the insurance market which is functioning properly—i.e., provide support only for third party losses from acts of terrorism.
 - Only provide reinsurance to Equitime if we provide reinsurance on these same terms to other private parties.

Discussion: Equitime is a very major intrusion into the operation of private insurance markets. It would provide one entity preferred status in the market by virtue of its federal support and it would provide federal subsidies for the replacement of a private market in those parts of the insurance market which are working well. The staff recommendation is that any Equitime endorsement be limited to the third party liability issue and be conditioned on providing comparable reinsurance to all parties seeking to compete against Equitime.

I left a message at 514-5000 but they are having trouble reaching you. Let's do the conference call at noon. At this point, we are fine with the time

I left a message at 514-5000 but they are having trouble reaching you.

Let's do the conference call at noon. At this point, we are fine with the time limitation being in section 5. However, we do want to be sure that Tribe is on board and so need to talk about the "decisions" issue.

This is very troubling given that presidential schedule has been predicated on closure! But I am willing to talk. You can reach me at 5145000 tell me if I need to set up the conf cal. Call in will be at same number

Terror insurance goes up and away

By John Ritter, USA TODAY

The Golden Gate Bridge is a tempting target for terrorists.

SAN FRANCISCO - Outside New York and Washington, not many terrorist targets are as juicy as the Golden Gate Bridge. The grand Art Deco span with the killer views is a landmark known worldwide. Tourists gambol between its red towers year-round. And with more than 115,000 vehicles crossing daily, it's a key link in a major commuter artery. If the bridge goes down, the Bay Area won't just be disrupted, its pride will be crushed.

So it was no surprise that insurance companies weren't eager to offer terrorism policies on the 65-year-old structure. In fact, only one did: $100 million worth of coverage for $1.7 million a year. Bridge officials said no thanks, $100 million wouldn't cover much of the $2.1 billion it would cost to replace all that steel and concrete if terrorists destroyed it.

"We're taking a gamble on a risk that you're not sure what, if anything, would ever happen," bridge spokeswoman Mary Currie says.

REV_00143188

Hard to get coverage

Far from the rubble of Ground Zero, fallout from the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks is keenly felt by owners of high-profile structures that could be in terrorists' cross hairs.

Before the attacks, virtually every insurance policy in America provided terrorism coverage. It was a risk included in standard all-risk policies.

But since the attacks, insurers have stripped terrorism coverage from those policies. Now it's pricey and hard to get.

Many owners of trophy properties are deciding they can't afford terrorism insurance, or they're buying much less coverage with higher deductibles. At the same time, regular property and liability premiums are skyrocketing.

The effects are unclear seven months after the attacks. Higher tolls had already been expected for Golden Gate Bridge users, but the steep rise in insurance rates could mean an even bigger hike. The current $3 two-way toll could go as high as $5.

Owners are expected to pass higher insurance costs on to tenants. Residents as well as commercial occupants in Chicago's John Hancock tower could face higher rents and fees because of insurance.

Businesses are wary of talking about their coverage. Representatives of the Empire State Building and Rockefeller Center in New York, Chicago's Sears Tower, Salt Lake City's Mormon Temple, Detroit's Ambassador Bridge, the San Francisco Giants' Pacific Bell Park and Seattle's Space Needle decline to discuss premiums.

"A large entity with a mouse as a mascot is a perfect example of that," says

P.J. Crowley, vice president of the Insurance Information Institute, an industry group. A Disney spokesperson says the company has terrorism insurance on its parks and resorts but declines to provide details.

Taxpayers are also affected.

The U.S. government "self-insures" its holdings, meaning Congress would dip into the Treasury to replace federal property destroyed by terrorism. At least $775 million in tax dollars is being spent to rebuild the Pentagon.

Local or state taxpayers are also liable elsewhere.

"The last time we had to renew, three years ago, the market was soft," says Steve Coleman, spokesman for the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, owners of bridges, tunnels and three major New York-area airports. "Now it's very hard, so we anticipate about a 300% increase." Current coverage of $1.5 billion cost $6.1 million a year.

Among public entities, few shoulder more perceived risk than New York's Metropolitan Transit Authority, owners of the Long Island Rail Road, seven bridges, including the Verrazano Narrows, and the New York City subway.

The World Trade Center attacks left MTA with an estimated $1 billion in losses, mostly in subway damage in Lower Manhattan. Its insurance policy expired six weeks after the tragedy. All the losses were covered.

MTA officials decided they could afford just $70 million in terrorism coverage on a new policy, and that kicks in only after MTA pays the first $30 million in claims. Premium cost: $7.5 million a year.

"We got quotations for $100 million in coverage, but it was too prohibitive," says Lauren Gregory, director of risk and insurance management.

MTA had expected a 10% increase in property and casualty coverage because of rising premiums industrywide. The expiring policy's $1.5 billion coverage limit had cost about $6 million a year. But after the attacks, the best MTA could get was a $500 million limit for $18 million. It has since been able to buy $250 million more in coverage for $2 million.

"New York makes underwriters a lot more nervous," Gregory says. "I get calls all the time from bridge and tunnel authorities and subways. I just spoke to a manager in Upstate New York, and she's getting socked with increases similar to what we had."

The industry says Congress' failure to create a $100 billion fund to back up terrorism losses is hurting economic recovery because banks won't make loans for projects that don't have terrorism coverage.

A General Accounting Office official told a House panel in February that the real estate and commercial lending industries are "beginning to experience difficulties" because they can't get terrorism coverage and that the situation could worsen as more policies come up for renewal this year.

But critics oppose a federal handout without evidence of widespread problems.

Losses from the attacks, first estimated as high as $70 billion, were half that. The industry has recouped the money it will pay out in claims resulting from Sept. 11 and then some. The Consumer Federation of America says the impact on the industry's bottom line was a loss of 7.2% of its surplus, only slightly more than after Hurricane Andrew. Yet the damage from that 1992 disaster was less than half that of Sept. 11.

Insurance rates had been going up briskly before Sept. 11, but a consumer federation study in January found that the attacks sped up the price increases in what some analysts "see as gouging."

'Pretty extreme' reaction

"Underwriters' zeal to make themselves healthy after the disaster caused them to do some pretty extreme things," says Jeff Mann, vice president of Driver Alliant Insurance Services, a large brokerage based in Carlsbad, Calif., that specializes in arranging coverage for municipalities.

There's fear that lenders holding mortgages on high-risk properties will demand that owners buy terrorism insurance. The owner of Mall of America in Bloomington, Minn., won a temporary restraining order after its lender tried to force it to buy terrorism coverage. The dispute was settled when the owner, Simon Property Group, agreed to buy a $100 million policy.

One of the nation's largest trusts, Equity Office Properties, reportedly paid $4.5 million for $200 million in terrorism insurance to protect its 670 buildings. But Equity has a number of trophy buildings whose individual values alone exceed $200 million, including One Market Street in San Francisco and Rowes Wharf in Boston.

Commercial Mortgage Alert, a real-estate industry newsletter, reported last month that the "terrorism insurance crisis seems to be easing." A handful of global companies are offering coverage, though it's expensive. But the newsletter said many policies don't cover chemical and biological attacks.

Robert Hunter, author of the consumer federation study, says a "taxpayer-funded bailout of this super-rich industry" is unwarranted.

The industry has complained for years about government interference and pushed for deregulation. "It's just like your kid, always testing your limits and always saying, 'I'm a big boy now,' " he says. "But as soon as there's any trouble, they run to Mommy."

chartInsurance costs soar

Operators of public facilities such as bridges and airports are paying higher premiums and getting less insurance since the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks. Many policies now exclude coverage for loss by terrorism.

107TH CONGRESS
2^D SESSION

S. J. RES. _____

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES introduced the following joint resolution; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on _____

JOINT RESOLUTION

Proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to protect the rights of crime victims.

1 Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives
2 of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-
3 thirds of each House concurring therein), That the fol-
4 lowing article is proposed as an amendment to the Con-
5 stitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all
6 intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when 7 ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several 8 States, and which shall take effect on the 180th day after 9 ratification of this article:

1 “ARTICLE —

2 “SECTION 1. The rights of victims of violent crime,
3 being capable of protection without denying the constitu-
4 tional rights of those accused of victimizing them, are 5 hereby established and shall not be denied by any State
6 or the United States and may be restricted only as pro-
7 vided in this article.

8 “SECTION 2. A victim of violent crime shall have the 9 right to reasonable and timely notice of any public pro-
10 ceeding involving the crime and of any release or escape 11 of the accused; the rights not to be excluded from such 12 public proceeding and reasonably to be heard at public re-13 lease, plea, sentencing, reprieve, and pardon proceedings;
14 and the right to adjudicative decisions that duly consider
15 the victim’s safety, interest in avoiding unreasonable 16 delay, and just and timely claims to restitution from the 17 offender. These rights shall not be restricted except when 18 and to the degree dictated by a substantial interest in pub-19 lic safety or the administration of criminal justice, or by 20 compelling necessity.

21 “SECTION 3. Nothing in this article shall be con-22 strued to provide grounds for a new trial or to authorize 23 any claim for damages. Only the victim or the victim’s 24 lawful representative may assert the rights established by

1 this article, and no person accused of the crime may obtain
2 any form of relief hereunder.

3 “SECTION 4. Congress shall have power to enforce
4 by appropriate legislation the provisions of this article.
5 Nothing in this article shall affect the President’s author-
6 ity to grant reprieves or pardons.

7 “SECTION 5. This article shall be inoperative unless 8 it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Con-9 stitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several 10 States within seven years from the date of its submission
11 to the States by the Congress.”.

White House Pushing Harder to Confirm Judges
Senate Committee's Rejection of Pickering Turned Into GOP Campaign Theme

By Amy Goldstein
Washington Post Staff Writer
Monday, April 15, 2002; Page A06

In the weeks since the Senate Judiciary Committee rejected Charles W. Pickering as an appeals court judge, the White House has begun to pursue a more aggressive course to try to push conservative judicial nominees through a skeptical Senate and onto the federal bench.

President Bush, Vice President Cheney and the White House's top political adviser, Karl Rove, have each sought to convert the failed judicial nomination into a useful political theme, saying that Pickering's defeat illustrates why voters this fall should tip the Senate back into GOP control.

In recent days, the White House also has held strategy sessions with Senate Republicans and sympathetic interest groups, urging them to speak out earlier and more forcefully on behalf of the people Bush has named as judges -- in an attempt to counteract opposition from liberal organizations and Senate Democrats. "We want to make sure [allies] are armed with the most complete and current information," said a senior administration official.

Pickering's defeat "told the administration they need to have a deliberate confirmation strategy as well as a deliberate nomination strategy," said Thomas L. Jipping, who until recently directed the Free Congress Foundation's Judicial Selection Monitoring Project.

As part of that strategy, the administration official said, the White House "wants to talk with citizenry around the country," encouraging voters to convey their support for Bush's nominees to their senators. White House officials also are considering assigning someone to work full time in the counsel's office to coordinate efforts to win judicial confirmations.

Together, these efforts represent an unconciliatory response to the defeat last month of Pickering by a single vote on the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Since that March 14 vote, in which the Mississippi district court judge was defeated along party lines, Bush and his senior aides have said repeatedly that they do not intend to deviate from the conservative cast they are working to give the federal judiciary through the nominations they began sending the Senate 11 months ago. "We are going to continue to nominate the same kind of people," White House Counsel Alberto R. Gonzales said in an interview. He said the dozens of nominees for appellate circuit courts and federal district courts are "well-qualified and in the mainstream," a characterization the administration's ideological opponents dispute.

Instead of selecting potential judges that Senate Democrats might find more appealing, the administration and its allies are ratcheting up their advocacy, accusing the Judiciary Committee of obstructionism and trying to inject the issue of judges into this year's congressional campaigns, particularly in the South.

Two days in a row last month, Bush broached Pickering's defeat at political events he attended in Georgia and Texas. "We're going to have more fights when it comes to the judiciary," he said at a fundraiser for Rep. C. Saxby Chambliss (Ga.), who is running for the Senate. Bush said the Senate needs more Republicans such as Chambliss who, he said, would have "stood up and defended the honor and integrity" of Pickering.

GOP strategists contend that the future of the judiciary -- while not a top-rung issue such as national security, the economy, education and health care -- nevertheless may prove potent in the midterm elections among the voters the White House is seeking to reach. "It's potentially a very significant campaign issue, particularly in generating intensity among Republican voters," said Whit Ayres, a GOP pollster based in Atlanta. "It also has salience for independent voters who hate Washington gridlock."

"It's just one more thing people can point to -- back in Washington, you are not getting things done," said Dan Allen, spokesman for the National Republican Senatorial Committee.

At least one prominent GOP candidate has picked up the theme. Two weeks after Lamar Alexander decided to run for the Senate from Tennessee, he chose the defeat of Pickering, whom he has known for years, as the topic for his first radio spot.

"President Bush was right about Judge Pickering. And he's right about fixing schools, cutting taxes and creating jobs," Alexander, a former U.S. education secretary and presidential aspirant, tells the radio audience. "I'm running for the Senate to support him."

And in the first overt sign that the more aggressive strategy is starting to play out on Capitol Hill, a group of prominent Senate Republicans last week sought to make the handling of one nominee a cause célèbre, suggesting that Democrats were racist in not yet scheduling a hearing on Miguel A. Estrada, a Hispanic Washington attorney, for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit.

Sen. Orrin G. Hatch (Utah), the panel's ranking Republican, said Judiciary Democrats "will simply not accept a Hispanic, an African American or even women who do not tow the line of the left of main center, liberal interest groups." Judiciary Chairman Patrick J. Leahy (D-Vt.), who has said he plans to hold a hearing on Estrada, responded that the GOP was spreading "pure partisan bunk that is flatly refuted by the record."

Two days later, Hatch lambasted Democrats and their allies again, saying "the stoves of the special interest groups are readying to boil up an attack" on a circuit court nominee who has had a confirmation hearing, D.

Brooks Smith of Pennsylvania. Opponents have criticized Smith for belonging to an all-male club, attending legal seminars by conservative groups and handling a case that involved a bank where his wife worked.

The intensified politics surrounding judges come as Senate Democrats say that the records and ideology of several nominees before the committee are producing qualms. "There are more than a few who are extremely problematic," said David Carle, a spokesman for Leahy. Democrats have concerns about additional circuit court nominations in the first wave that Bush announced in May. Besides Estrada and Smith, they include Jeffrey S. Sutton for the Ohio-based 6th Circuit; Michael W. McConnell of Utah for the 10th Circuit; and Priscilla R. Owen of Texas for the 5th Circuit.

Still, Leahy has put forth statistics suggesting the committee, which he has led since last summer, is moving more swiftly on Bush's nominees than the panel did when it was run by Republicans during much of the Clinton administration. Leahy says he has sought to act on as many nominees as possible who are relatively noncontroversial, and has confirmed 42 -- nearly half of those the White House has sent to the Senate.

The White House and Bush's outside allies, however, have produced rival statistics portraying the committee as obstructionist. They contend the committee is unfairly blocking hearings and votes on nominees who, they say, would be likely to win confirmation on the Senate floor.

Cheney picked up this theme last week. He said the Senate was exacerbating a "vacancy crisis" in the federal courts through "inexcusable" delays in hearings and votes on Bush's nominees.

White House Pushing Harder to Confirm Judges
Senate Committee's Rejection of Pickering Turned Into GOP Campaign Theme

By Amy Goldstein
Washington Post Staff Writer

In the weeks since the Senate Judiciary Committee rejected Charles W. Pickering as an appeals court judge, the White House has begun to pursue a more aggressive course to try to push conservative judicial nominees through a skeptical Senate and onto the federal bench.

President Bush, Vice President Cheney and the White House's top political adviser, Karl Rove, have each sought to convert the failed judicial nomination into a useful political theme, saying that Pickering's defeat illustrates why voters this fall should tip the Senate back into GOP control.

In recent days, the White House also has held strategy sessions with Senate Republicans and sympathetic interest groups, urging them to speak out earlier and more forcefully on behalf of the people Bush has named as judges -- in an attempt to counteract opposition from liberal organizations and Senate Democrats. "We want to make sure [allies] are armed with the most complete and current information," said a senior administration official.

Pickering's defeat "told the administration they need to have a deliberate confirmation strategy as well as a deliberate nomination strategy," said Thomas L. Jipping, who until recently directed the Free Congress Foundation's Judicial Selection Monitoring Project.

As part of that strategy, the administration official said, the White House "wants to talk with citizenry around the country," encouraging voters to convey their support for Bush's nominees to their senators. White House officials also are considering assigning someone to work full time in the counsel's office to coordinate efforts to win judicial confirmations.

Together, these efforts represent an unconciliatory response to the defeat last month of Pickering by a single vote on the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Since that March 14 vote, in which the Mississippi district court judge was defeated along party lines, Bush and his senior aides have said repeatedly that they do not intend to deviate from the conservative cast they are working to give the federal judiciary through the nominations they began sending the Senate 11 months ago. "We are going to continue to nominate the same kind of people," White House Counsel Alberto R. Gonzales said in an interview. RE: FEDERAL ROLE IN THE AVIATION TERRORISM INSURANCE
MARKET

Background

Aviation Insurance provides three primary types of insurance, under a variety of different circumstances:

- 1) Insurance for the loss of the airplane, referred to as hull insurance.
- 2) Insurance for losses suffered by the passengers on that plane.
- 3) Insurance for losses caused to other people and property.

Broadly speaking, we can define this insurance as being provided under three circumstances:

- 1) For losses incurred during normal peacetime operations.
- 2) For losses incurred in times of war.
- 3) For losses incurred from acts of terrorism.

The private insurance market currently functions well for all three perils during both peace and war. Moreover, during war it imposes important discipline on the carriers by virtue of the fact that the coverage is cancelable on short notice. This allows the insurance to be appropriately re-priced to reflect the higher risk and provides the carriers a limited window during which they can remove their vulnerable assets from the war zone.

The insurance market even operates quite efficiently when the threat is terrorism. Although terrorism can pose a worldwide threat, making it impossible to relocate assets to a safe haven, the market has shown that it can price the risk for hull and passenger losses as these are known risks – maximum loss is limited to the value of the plane and the number of passengers it carries times the average compensation paid those passengers. The problem arises in liability for third party losses from acts of terrorism. The most notable such example is the loss of life in the World Trade Center attack.

Staff recommends that any action we take acknowledge that the insurance market has shown itself well capable of providing coverage for all other perils in all other circumstances and should be allowed to operate as it historically has. Thus, the only open issue is how to deal with third party losses resulting from an act of terrorism.

The policy question before the Administration is what role, if any, the federal government should continue to play in the market for aviation insurance against terrorist events.

Current State of the Market

Prior to the attacks of 9/11, airlines were paying approximately 5 cents a passenger to secure $1.5 billion of insurance coverage against all perils. (This 5 cents number makes me nervous – this is Delta’s estimate, right? Can we get any independent verification of pre 9/11 costs. My take is that TOTAL insurance costs rose 2-3 times, not 25-fold has this would imply). That cost has since risen to $1.25 per passenger, with a limitation of $50 million in third party losses.

Immediately after the terrorist attacks of 9/11, private insurers invoked cancellation clauses in their policies, leaving airlines without coverage. The Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act authorized the federal government to provide insurance coverage. The Act capped third party liability at $100 million, and the FAA agreed to provide coverage above the first $50 million of losses for a charge of $7.50 per takeoff, approximately 8 cents per passenger. While the liability cap expired on March 20, the Secretary of Transportation extended the FAA insurance element for 60 days.

A private insurance consortium, headed by AIG, has expressed strong interest in providing this insurance coverage to the airline industry. This would provide $1b in third party coverage. The price initially quoted was $1.85 per passenger, although market pressures may, over time, serve to attenuate that price. This offer of coverage, like the coverage which was offered prior to 9/11, would be cancelable at the discretion of the insurer, possibly forcing us to again revisit this issue in the future should another event occur. It is important to note that it is difficult to assess the actual premium costs that would arise in a private market, as the presence of the FAA in this market has limited the ability of the private market to provide accurate price quotes. Based on international experience, however, it is reasonable to assume that AIG would be willing to provide third party coverage at a rate substantially less than $1.85. In the UK, AIG has agreed to provide such coverage for only 75 cents per passenger, subject to a maximum industry exposure of $2 billion.

At the same time, the airline industry is advancing a captive insurer concept they refer to as Equitime. This would be a risk retention group that would provide insurance services to the industry. The airlines believe that starting this venture would require a medium term commitment for the federal government to provide excess-of-loss coverage reinsurance through the federal government. Equitime is intended to provide coverage not just for the third party losses from terrorism but for all the industry’s insurance needs.

It is important to note that neither the private insurance market nor the Equitime solution will cover all losses from a large event. Private aviation insurance from the 9/11 attack was approximately $6-8 billion. The Stabilization Act directly spent $40 billion in addition to establishing an open-ended Victim’s Compensation Fund that could cost another $5-6 billion. A federal financial role will clearly exist in the wake of another incident. (This paragraph does not seem needed. It seems to confuse aviation versus other forms of insurance, etc.)

Recommendation From Principals

A consensus was reached at the first Principals meeting that the appropriate solution was to limit third party liability from acts of terrorism. This was accompanied by the recognition that only legislative action could achieve this goal and that such action was unlikely in the current session of Congress. This requires that decisions be made on how to meet insurance needs of the industry in the medium term.

Decisions Required by Principals

1) Should we seek legislative action in the next Congress to limit third party liability from acts of terrorism?

Discussion: This decision may be premature and it may be desirable to await the conclusion of congressional action on the broader terrorism insurance bill. Note that the coverage limits in the bill under discussion in the Congress cover all property and casualty losses (not just those for aviation) and call for private insurance coverage of the first $10 billion of an event. ~~and that~~ This far exceeds the coverage the airlines formerly carried or feel they could afford to carry today. It is an open question whether ~~Thus~~ direct action on the aviation insurance question may still be necessary even with the passage of a broader terrorism bill.

2) On March 20th, The Department of Transportation extended for 60 days the third party liability insurance it offers through the FAA. Upon expiration of those 60 days should we:

- Exit market immediately and let airlines obtain private coverage.
- Keep existing FAA program in place but gradually transition out of the market by raising premiums and/or increasing the “deductible.”
- Keep existing FAA program in place “as is” ~~for a period of time~~ while pursuing liability limitations.
- Explicitly back the airline industry Equitime proposal.

Discussion: This is the most difficult and contentious issue. ~~The arguments fall into three camps~~ are summarized below: (This discussion should be in the same order as the options listed above. And the “camps” should map to the four options. Currently, a government phase-out is linked to Equitime, but it could also be linked to phase to private markets.)

Immediate Private Market Solution: If the goal is to provide appropriate incentives for the private sector to mitigate the risk and cost of future terrorist attacks, then a well-functioning private insurance market is best able to do this. Thus, we should announce our intention to exit the direct provision of insurance and make clear that we will not subsidize Equitime.

Gradually phase to a private market solution: Keep existing FAA program in place but gradually transition out of the market by raising premiums and/or increasing the “deductible.” This approach seeks to strike a balance between the desire for private sector risk mitigation incentives, and the recognition that, in the short-run, private insurers may not be able to provide coverage above $1 billion.

Formatted

Costs of Terrorism are a social cost: If one subscribes to the view that the costs of terrorist acts should be borne by society as a whole then that goal can be met by continuing to provide the insurance through the FAA and providing it a below market rates while we attempt to limit liability.

Equitime: If the goal is to ensure that insurance is available, and one does not believe the private insurance market will or can properly price the product, then the case can be made for either advancing alternate vehicles such as Equitime.

Formatted

Market Failure: If the goal is to ensure that insurance is available and one does not believe the private insurance market will or can properly price the product, then the case can be made for either advancing alternate vehicles (e.g., Equitime) or providing the insurance through the Federal Government and attempting to price it at the “appropriate” rate. A market failure position is also consistent with a continuation of the existing FAA insurance program with the cost of that insurance increased either in response to market conditions or in a pre-defined phased-in path to increase market performance.

Private Markets as the Optimal Solution: If the goal is to foster market participation then we should promptly announce our intention to exit the direct provision of insurance and make clear that we will not subsidize Equitime.

- 4) If an endorsement is made of the Equitime proposal, ~~should that endorsement~~, with its attendant federal role as a reinsurer, should that endorsement be:
- As a reinsurer to the full Equitime proposal
 - Limited so as not to subsidize competition for that portion of the insurance market which is functioning properly—i.e., provide support only for third party losses from acts of terrorism.
 - Only provide reinsurance to Equitime if we provide reinsurance on these same terms to other private ~~insurers~~ parties.

Discussion: Equitime is a very major intrusion into the operation of private insurance markets. It would provide one entity preferred status in the market by virtue of its federal support and it would provide federal subsidies for the replacement of a private market in those parts of the insurance market which are working well. The staff recommendation is that any Equitime endorsement be limited to the third party liability issue and be conditioned on providing comparable reinsurance to all parties seeking to compete against Equitime.

Note that the coverage limits in the bill under discussion in the Congress call for private insurance coverage of the first $10 billion of an event and that this far exceeds the coverage the airlines formerly carried or feel they could afford to carry today. Thus direct action on the aviation insurance question may still be necessary even with the passage of a broader terrorism bill.

2) On March 20th, The Department of Transportation extended for 60 days the third party liability insurance it offers through the FAA. Upon expiration of those 60 days should we:

- Exit market immediately and let airlines obtain private coverage.
- Keep existing FAA program in place but gradually transition out of the market by raising premiums and/or increasing the “deductible.”
- Keep existing FAA program in place “as is” for a period of time.
- Explicitly back the airline industry Equitime proposal.

Discussion: This is the most difficult and contentious issue. The arguments fall into three camps summarized below:

Costs of Terrorism are a social cost: If one subscribes to the view that the costs of terrorist acts should be borne by society as a whole then that goal can be met by continuing to provide the insurance through the FAA and providing it at below market rates while we attempt to limit liability.

Market Failure: If the goal is to ensure that insurance is available and one does not believe the private insurance market will or can properly price the product, then the case can be made for either advancing alternate vehicles (e.g., Equitime) or providing the insurance through the Federal Government and attempting to price it at the “appropriate” rate. A market failure position is also consistent with a continuation of the existing FAA insurance program with the cost of that insurance increased either in response to market conditions or in a pre-defined phased-in path to increase market performance.

Private Markets as the Optimal Solution: If the goal is to foster market participation then we should promptly announce our intention to exit the direct provision of insurance and make clear that we will not subsidize Equitime.

- 4) If an endorsement is made of the Equitime proposal should that endorsement, with its attendant federal role as a reinsurer, should that endorsement be:
- As a reinsurer to the full Equitime proposal
 - Limited so as not to subsidize competition for that portion of the insurance market which is functioning properly—i.e., provide support only for third party losses from acts of terrorism.
 - Only provide reinsurance to Equitime if we provide reinsurance on these same terms to other private parties.

Discussion: Equitime is a very major intrusion into the operation of private insurance markets. It would provide one entity preferred status in the market by virtue of its federal support and it would provide federal subsidies for the replacement of a private market in those parts of the insurance market which are working well. The staff recommendation is that any Equitime endorsement be limited to the third party liability issue and be conditioned on providing comparable reinsurance to all parties seeking to compete against Equitime.

RE: FEDERAL ROLE IN THE AVIATION TERRORISM INSURANCE MARKET

Background

Aviation Insurance provides three primary types of insurance, under a variety of different circumstances:

- 1) Insurance for the loss of the airplane, referred to as hull insurance.
- 2) Insurance for losses suffered by the passengers on that plane.
- 3) Insurance for losses caused to other people and property. [why is it necessary to distinguish between 2 and 3? In the rest of the memo, there isn't a distinction made between different types of third-party liability]

Broadly speaking, we can define this insurance as being provided under three circumstances:

- 1) For losses incurred during normal peacetime operations.
- 2) For losses incurred in times of war.
- 3) For losses incurred from acts of terrorism.

The private insurance market currently functions well for all three perils during both peace and war. Moreover, during war it imposes important discipline on the carriers by virtue of the fact that the coverage is cancelable on short notice. This allows the insurance to be appropriately re-priced to reflect the higher risk and provides the carriers a limited window during which they can remove their vulnerable assets from the war zone.

The insurance market even operates quite efficiently when the threat is terrorism. Although terrorism can pose a worldwide threat, making it impossible to relocate assets to a safe haven, the market has shown that it can price the risk for hull and passenger losses as these are known risks – maximum loss is limited to the value of the plane and the number of passengers it carries times the average compensation paid those passengers. The problem arises in liability for third party losses from acts of terrorism. The most notable such example is the loss of life in the World Trade Center attack.

Staff recommends that any action we take acknowledge that the insurance market has shown itself well capable of providing coverage for all other perils in all other circumstances and should be allowed to operate as it historically has. Thus, the only open issue is how to deal with third party losses resulting from an act of terrorism.

The policy question before the Administration is what role, if any, the federal government should continue to play in the market for aviation insurance against terrorist events.

Current State of the Market

Prior to the attacks of 9/11, airlines were paying approximately 5 cents a passenger to secure $1.5 billion of insurance coverage against all perils. (This 5 cents number makes me nervous – this is Delta’s estimate, right? Can we get any independent verification of pre 9/11 costs. My take is that TOTAL insurance costs rose 2-3 times, not 25-fold as this would imply). That cost has since risen to $1.25 per passenger, with a limitation of $50 million in third party losses.

Immediately after the terrorist attacks of 9/11, private insurers invoked cancellation clauses in their policies, leaving airlines without coverage. The Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act authorized the federal government to provide insurance coverage. The Act capped third party liability at $100 million, and the FAA agreed to provide coverage above the first $50 million of losses for a charge of $7.50 per takeoff, approximately 8 cents per passenger. While the liability cap expired on March 20, the Secretary of Transportation extended the FAA insurance element for 60 days.

A private insurance consortium, headed by AIG, has expressed strong interest in providing this insurance coverage to the airline industry. This would provide $1b in third party coverage. The price initially quoted was $1.85 per passenger, although market pressures may, over time, serve to attenuate lower that price. This offer of coverage, like the coverage which was offered prior to 9/11, would be cancelable at the discretion of the insurer, possibly forcing us to again revisit this issue in the future should another event occur. It is important to note that it is difficult to assess the actual premium costs that would arise in a private market, as the presence of the FAA in this market has limited the ability of the private market to provide accurate price quotes. Based on international experience, however, it is reasonable to assume that AIG would be willing to provide third party coverage at a rate substantially less than $1.85. In the UK, AIG has agreed to provide such coverage for only 75 cents per passenger, subject to a maximum industry exposure of $2 billion.

At the same time, the airline industry is advancing a captive insurer concept they refer to as Equitime. This would be a risk retention group that would provide insurance services to the industry. The airlines believe that $starting this venture would require a medium term commitment for the federal government to to provide excess-of-loss coverage reinsurance through the federal government. Equitime is intended to provide coverage not just for the third party losses from terrorism but for all the industry’s insurance needs.

It is important to note that neither the private insurance market nor the Equitime solution will cover all losses from a large event. Private aviation insurance from the 9/11 attack was approximately $6-8 billion. The Stabilization Act directly spent $40 billion in addition to establishing an open-ended Victim’s Compensation Fund that could cost

~~another $5-6 billion. A federal financial role will clearly exist in the wake of another incident. (This paragraph does not seem needed. It seems to confuse aviation versus other forms of insurance, etc.)~~

Recommendation From Principals

A consensus was reached at the first Principals meeting that the appropriate solution was to limit third party liability from acts of terrorism. This was accompanied by the recognition that only legislative action could achieve this goal and that such action was unlikely in the current session of Congress. This requires that decisions be made on how to meet insurance needs of the industry in the medium term.

Decisions Required by Principals

1) Should we seek legislative action in the next Congress to limit third party liability from acts of terrorism? [why is this question on the table? Can the principles make this decision now? Won't it depend on lots of intervening events like a) whether we get another event; b) whether we keep the House or win back the Senate; c) whether we get a risk insurance bill. KS]

Discussion: This decision may be premature and it may be desirable to await the conclusion of congressional action on the broader terrorism insurance bill. Note that the coverage limits in the bill under discussion in the Congress cover all property and casualty losses (not just those for aviation) and call for private insurance coverage of the first $10 billion of an event, and that ~~that~~ This far exceeds the coverage the airlines formerly carried or feel they could afford to carry today. [I don't understand this pt. In the broader risk insurance bill, the $10b industry retention was for all P&C carriers. Airline insurers would be entitled to a pro rata payment depending on their share of the $10b. If the ratios of airline insurance losses to other industry losses was the same as for the WTC, the airline industry retention would be less than $2b. Am I missing something? KS]. It is an open question whether ~~Thus~~ direct action on the aviation insurance question may still be necessary even with the passage of a broader terrorism bill.

2) On March 20th, The Department of Transportation extended for 60 days the third party liability insurance it offers through the FAA. Upon expiration of those 60 days should we:

- Exit market immediately and let airlines obtain private coverage.
- Keep existing FAA program in place but gradually transition out of the market by raising premiums and/or increasing the "deductible."
- Keep existing FAA program in place "as is" ~~for a period of time~~ while pursuing liability limitations.
- Explicitly back the airline industry Equitime proposal.

Discussion: This is the most difficult and contentious issue. ~~The arguments fall into three camps~~ are summarized below: (This discussion should be in the same order as the options listed above. And the "camps" should map to the four options. Currently, a government phase-out is linked to Equitime, but it could also be linked to phase to private markets.)

Immediate Private Market Solution: If the goal is to provide appropriate incentives for the private sector to mitigate the risk and cost of future terrorist attacks, then a well-functioning private insurance market is best able to do this. Thus, we should announce our intention to exit the direct provision of insurance and make clear that we will not subsidize Equitime.

Gradually phase to a private market solution: Keep existing FAA program in place but gradually transition out of the market by raising premiums and/or increasing the “deductible.” This approach seeks to strike a balance between the desire for private sector risk mitigation incentives, and the recognition that, in the short-run, private insurers may not be able to provide coverage above $1 billion.

Formatted

Costs of Terrorism are a social cost: If one subscribes to the view that the costs of terrorist acts should be borne by society as a whole then that goal can be met by continuing to provide the insurance through the FAA and providing it a below market rates while we attempt to limit liability.

Equitime: If the goal is to ensure that insurance is available, and one does not believe the private insurance market will or can properly price the product, then the case can be made for either advancing alternate vehicles such as Equitime.

Formatted

Market Failure: If the goal is to ensure that insurance is available and one does not believe the private insurance market will or can properly price the product, then the case can be made for either advancing alternate vehicles (e.g., Equitime) or providing the insurance through the Federal Government and attempting to price it at the “appropriate” rate. A market failure position is also consistent with a continuation of the existing FAA insurance program with the cost of that insurance increased either in response to market conditions or in a pre-defined phased-in path to increase market performance.

Private Markets as the Optimal Solution: If the goal is to foster market participation then we should promptly announce our intention to exit the direct provision of insurance and make clear that we will not subsidize Equitime.

 - Limited so as not to subsidize competition for that portion of the insurance market which is functioning properly—i.e., provide support only for third party losses from acts of terrorism.
 - Only provide reinsurance to Equitime if we provide reinsurance on these same terms to other private insurers/parties.

Discussion: Equitime is a very major intrusion into the operation of private insurance markets. It would provide one entity preferred status in the market by virtue of its federal support and it would provide federal subsidies for the replacement of a private market in those parts of the insurance market which are working well. Terror insurance goes up and away

The Golden Gate Bridge is a tempting target for terrorists.

SAN FRANCISCO - Outside New York and Washington, not many terrorist targets are as juicy as the Golden Gate Bridge. The grand Art Deco span with the killer views is a landmark known worldwide. Tourists gambol between its red towers year-round. And with more than 115,000 vehicles crossing daily, it's a key link in a major commuter artery. If the bridge goes down, the Bay Area won't just be disrupted, its pride will be crushed.

So it was no surprise that insurance companies weren't eager to offer terrorism policies on the 65-year-old structure. In fact, only one did: $100 million worth of coverage for $1.7 million a year. Bridge officials said no thanks, $100 million wouldn't cover much of the $2.1 billion it would cost to replace all that steel and concrete if terrorists destroyed it.

"We're taking a gamble on a risk that you're not sure what, if anything, would ever happen," bridge spokeswoman Mary Currie says.

Hard to get coverage

Far from the rubble of Ground Zero, fallout from the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks is keenly felt by owners of high-profile structures that could be in terrorists' cross hairs.

Before the attacks, virtually every insurance policy in America provided terrorism coverage. It was a risk included in standard all-risk policies.

But since the attacks, insurers have stripped terrorism coverage from those policies. Now it's pricey and hard to get.

Many owners of trophy properties are deciding they can't afford terrorism insurance, or they're buying much less coverage with higher deductibles. At the same time, regular property and liability premiums are skyrocketing.

The effects are unclear seven months after the attacks. Higher tolls had already been expected for Golden Gate Bridge users, but the steep rise in insurance rates could mean an even bigger hike. The current $3 two-way toll could go as high as $5.

Owners are expected to pass higher insurance costs on to tenants. Residents as well as commercial occupants in Chicago's John Hancock tower could face higher rents and fees because of insurance.

Businesses are wary of talking about their coverage. Representatives of the Empire State Building and Rockefeller Center in New York, Chicago's Sears Tower, Salt Lake City's Mormon Temple, Detroit's Ambassador Bridge, the San Francisco Giants' Pacific Bell Park and Seattle's Space Needle decline to discuss premiums.

"A large entity with a mouse as a mascot is a perfect example of that," says

P.J. Crowley, vice president of the Insurance Information Institute, an industry group. A Disney spokesperson says the company has terrorism insurance on its parks and resorts but declines to provide details.

Taxpayers are also affected.

The U.S. government "self-insures" its holdings, meaning Congress would dip into the Treasury to replace federal property destroyed by terrorism. At least $775 million in tax dollars is being spent to rebuild the Pentagon.

Local or state taxpayers are also liable elsewhere.

"The last time we had to renew, three years ago, the market was soft," says Steve Coleman, spokesman for the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, owners of bridges, tunnels and three major New York-area airports. "Now it's

billion cost $6.1 million a year.

Among public entities, few shoulder more perceived risk than New York's Metropolitan Transit Authority, owners of the Long Island Rail Road, seven bridges, including the Verrazano Narrows, and the New York City subway.

The World Trade Center attacks left MTA with an estimated $1 billion in losses, mostly in subway damage in Lower Manhattan. Its insurance policy expired six weeks after the tragedy. All the losses were covered.

MTA officials decided they could afford just $70 million in terrorism coverage on a new policy, and that kicks in only after MTA pays the first $30 million in claims. Premium cost: $7.5 million a year.

"We got quotations for $100 million in coverage, but it was too

prohibitive," says Lauren Gregory, director of risk and insurance management.

MTA had expected a 10% increase in property and casualty coverage because of rising premiums industrywide. The expiring policy's $1.5 billion coverage limit had cost about $6 million a year. But after the attacks, the best MTA could get was a $500 million limit for $18 million. It has since been able to buy $250 million more in coverage for $2 million.

"New York makes underwriters a lot more nervous," Gregory says. "I get calls all the time from bridge and tunnel authorities and subways. I just spoke to a manager in Upstate New York, and she's getting socked with increases similar to what we had."

The industry says Congress' failure to create a $100 billion fund to back up terrorism losses is hurting economic recovery because banks won't make loans for projects that don't have terrorism coverage.

A General Accounting Office official told a House panel in February that the real estate and commercial lending industries are "beginning to experience difficulties" because they can't get terrorism coverage and that the situation could worsen as more policies come up for renewal this year.

But critics oppose a federal handout without evidence of widespread problems.

Losses from the attacks, first estimated as high as $70 billion, were half that. The industry has recouped the money it will pay out in claims resulting from Sept. 11 and then some. The Consumer Federation of America says the impact on the industry's bottom line was a loss of 7.2% of its surplus, only slightly more than after Hurricane Andrew. Yet the damage from that 1992 disaster was less than half that of Sept. 11.

Insurance rates had been going up briskly before Sept. 11, but a consumer federation study in January found that the attacks sped up the price increases in what some analysts "see as gouging."

'Pretty extreme' reaction

"Underwriters' zeal to make themselves healthy after the disaster caused them to do some pretty extreme things," says Jeff Mann, vice president of Driver Alliant Insurance Services, a large brokerage based in Carlsbad, Calif., that specializes in arranging coverage for municipalities.

There's fear that lenders holding mortgages on high-risk properties will demand that owners buy terrorism insurance. The owner of Mall of America in Bloomington, Minn., won a temporary restraining order after its lender tried to force it to buy terrorism coverage. The dispute was settled when the owner, Simon Property Group, agreed to buy a $100 million policy.

One of the nation's largest trusts, Equity Office Properties, reportedly paid $4.5 million for $200 million in terrorism insurance to protect its 670 buildings. But Equity has a number of trophy buildings whose individual values alone exceed $200 million, including One Market Street in San Francisco and Rowes Wharf in Boston.

Commercial Mortgage Alert, a real-estate industry newsletter, reported last month that the "terrorism insurance crisis seems to be easing." A handful of global companies are offering coverage, though it's expensive. But the newsletter said many policies don't cover chemical and biological attacks.

Robert Hunter, author of the consumer federation study, says a "taxpayer-funded bailout of this super-rich industry" is unwarranted.

The industry has complained for years about government interference and pushed for deregulation. "It's just like your kid, always testing your limits and always saying, 'I'm a big boy now,' " he says. "But as soon as there's any trouble, they run to Mommy."

chartInsurance costs soar

Operators of public facilities such as bridges and airports are paying higher premiums and getting less insurance since the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks. Many policies now exclude coverage for loss by terrorism.

AP has requested the members of Congress who have brought individuals to the White House for tours. The inquiry is the result of an article in the Tulsa World that claimed that Rep. Tom Davis called a former Rep. Gov. of Kansas asking him to be the Chair of a new GOP business group. In the message that was left for the Gov, it mentioned that if he donated and accepted the Chairmanship, one of the benefits would be a White House tour. We worked that individual situation out last week, but it has led to other questions.

The facts are actually decent - 68 members or their wives have brought individuals or small groups (no more than 6 at a time), and more D's have been on tours than R's. AP also wanted the names of the guests they brought, but I think it's more appropriate that the individuals members make decisions about that information.

Just want to check with you before I give the info out.

John Thune is about to send out tickets for the SD rally and wants to send out a letter to state party supporters informing them of where to get tickets. This will help make sure that our people are getting the tickets. Are you ok with his sending this out, provided that it's ok with counsel? It makes clear that the rally is paid for by the SD GOP.

MARKET

Background

Aviation Insurance provides three primary types of insurance, under a variety of different circumstances:

- 1) Insurance for the loss of the airplane, referred to as hull insurance.
- 2) Insurance for losses suffered by the passengers on that plane.
- 3) Insurance for losses caused to other people and property.

Broadly speaking, we can define this insurance as being provided under three circumstances:

- 1) For losses incurred during normal peacetime operations.
- 2) For losses incurred in times of war.
- 3) For losses incurred from acts of terrorism.

The private insurance market currently functions well for all three perils during both peace and war. Moreover, during war it imposes important discipline on the carriers by virtue of the fact that the coverage is cancelable on short notice. This allows the insurance to be appropriately re-priced to reflect the higher risk and provides the carriers a limited window during which they can remove their vulnerable assets from the war zone.

The insurance market even operates quite efficiently when the threat is terrorism. Although terrorism can pose a worldwide threat, making it impossible to relocate assets to a safe haven, the market has shown that it can price the risk for hull and passenger losses as these are known risks – maximum loss is limited to the value of the plane and the number of passengers it carries times the average compensation paid those passengers. The problem arises in liability for third party losses from acts of terrorism. The most notable such example is the loss of life in the World Trade Center attack.

Staff recommends that any action we take acknowledge that the insurance market has shown itself well capable of providing coverage for all other perils in all other circumstances and should be allowed to operate as it historically has. Thus, the only open issue is how to deal with third party losses resulting from an act of terrorism.

The policy question before the Administration is what role, if any, the federal government should continue to play in the market for aviation insurance against terrorist events.

Current State of the Market

Prior to the attacks of 9/11, airlines were paying approximately 5 cents a passenger to secure $1.5 billion of insurance coverage against all perils. (This 5 cents number makes me nervous – this is Delta’s estimate, right? Can we get any independent verification of pre 9/11 costs. My take is that TOTAL insurance costs rose 2-3 times, not 25-fold has this would imply). That cost has since risen to $1.25 per passenger, with a limitation of $50 million in third party losses.

Immediately after the terrorist attacks of 9/11, private insurers invoked cancellation clauses in their policies, leaving airlines without coverage. The Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act authorized the federal government to provide insurance coverage. The Act capped third party liability at $100 million, and the FAA agreed to provide coverage above the first $50 million of losses for a charge of $7.50 per takeoff, approximately 8 cents per passenger. While the liability cap expired on March 20, the Secretary of Transportation extended the FAA insurance element for 60 days.

A private insurance consortium, headed by AIG, has expressed strong interest in providing this insurance coverage to the airline industry. This would provide $1b in third party coverage. The price initially quoted was $1.85 per passenger, although market pressures may, over time, serve to attenuate that price. This offer of coverage, like the coverage which was offered prior to 9/11, would be cancelable at the discretion of the insurer, possibly forcing us to again revisit this issue in the future should another event occur. It is important to note that it is difficult to assess the actual premium costs that would arise in a private market, as the presence of the FAA in this market has limited the ability of the private market to provide accurate price quotes. Based on international experience, however, it is reasonable to assume that AIG would be willing to provide third party coverage at a rate substantially less than $1.85. In the UK, AIG has agreed to provide such coverage for only 75 cents per passenger, subject to a maximum industry exposure of $2 billion.

At the same time, the airline industry is advancing a captive insurer concept they refer to as Equitime. This would be a risk retention group that would provide insurance services to the industry. The airlines believe that starting this venture would require a medium term commitment for the federal government to provide excess-of-loss coverage reinsurance through the federal government. Equitime is intended to provide coverage not just for the third party losses from terrorism but for all the industry’s insurance needs.

It is important to note that neither the private insurance market nor the Equitime solution will cover all losses from a large event. Private aviation insurance from the 9/11 attack was approximately $6-8 billion. The Stabilization Act directly spent $40 billion in addition to establishing an open-ended Victim’s Compensation Fund that could cost another $5-6 billion. A federal financial role will clearly exist in the wake of another incident. (This paragraph does not seem needed. It seems to confuse aviation versus other forms of insurance, etc.)

Recommendation From Principals

A consensus was reached at the first Principals meeting that the appropriate solution was to limit third party liability from acts of terrorism. This was accompanied by the recognition that only legislative action could achieve this goal and that such action was unlikely in the current session of Congress. This requires that decisions be made on how to meet insurance needs of the industry in the medium term.

Decisions Required by Principals

1) Should we seek legislative action in the next Congress to limit third party liability from acts of terrorism?

Discussion: This decision may be premature and it may be desirable to await the conclusion of congressional action on the broader terrorism insurance bill. Note that the coverage limits in the bill under discussion in the Congress cover all property and casualty losses (not just those for aviation) and call for private insurance coverage of the first $10 billion of an event. ~~and that~~ This far exceeds the coverage the airlines formerly carried or feel they could afford to carry today. It is an open question whether ~~Thus~~ direct action on the aviation insurance question may still be necessary even with the passage of a broader terrorism bill.

2) On March 20th, The Department of Transportation extended for 60 days the third party liability insurance it offers through the FAA. Upon expiration of those 60 days should we:

- Exit market immediately and let airlines obtain private coverage.
- Keep existing FAA program in place but gradually transition out of the market by raising premiums and/or increasing the “deductible.”
- Keep existing FAA program in place “as is” ~~for a period of time~~ while pursuing liability limitations.
- Explicitly back the airline industry Equitime proposal.

Discussion: This is the most difficult and contentious issue. ~~The arguments fall into three camps~~ are summarized below: (This discussion should be in the same order as the options listed above. And the “camps” should map to the four options. Currently, a government phase-out is linked to Equitime, but it could also be linked to phase to private markets.)

Immediate Private Market Solution: If the goal is to provide appropriate incentives for the private sector to mitigate the risk and cost of future terrorist attacks, then a well-functioning private insurance market is best able to do this. Thus, we should announce our intention to exit the direct provision of insurance and make clear that we will not subsidize Equitime.

Gradually phase to a private market solution: Keep existing FAA program in place but gradually transition out of the market by raising premiums and/or increasing the “deductible.” This approach seeks to strike a balance between the desire for private sector risk mitigation incentives, and the recognition that, in the short-run, private insurers may not be able to provide coverage above $1 billion.

Formatted

Costs of Terrorism are a social cost: If one subscribes to the view that the costs of terrorist acts should be borne by society as a whole then that goal can be met by continuing to provide the insurance through the FAA and providing it a below market rates while we attempt to limit liability.

Equitime: If the goal is to ensure that insurance is available, and one does not believe the private insurance market will or can properly price the product, then the case can be made for either advancing alternate vehicles such as Equitime.

Formatted

Market Failure: If the goal is to ensure that insurance is available and one does not believe the private insurance market will or can properly price the product, then the case can be made for either advancing alternate vehicles (e.g., Equitime) or providing the insurance through the Federal Government and attempting to price it at the “appropriate” rate. A market failure position is also consistent with a continuation of the existing FAA insurance program with the cost of that insurance increased either in response to market conditions or in a pre-defined phased-in path to increase market performance.

Private Markets as the Optimal Solution: If the goal is to foster market participation then we should promptly announce our intention to exit the direct provision of insurance and make clear that we will not subsidize Equitime.

- 4) If an endorsement is made of the Equitime proposal, ~~should that endorsement~~, with its attendant federal role as a reinsurer, should that endorsement be:
- As a reinsurer to the full Equitime proposal
 - Limited so as not to subsidize competition for that portion of the insurance market which is functioning properly—i.e., provide support only for third party losses from acts of terrorism.
 - Only provide reinsurance to Equitime if we provide reinsurance on these same terms to other private ~~insurers~~ parties.

Discussion: Equitime is a very major intrusion into the operation of private insurance markets. It would provide one entity preferred status in the market by virtue of its federal support and it would provide federal subsidies for the replacement of a private market in those parts of the insurance market which are working well. The staff recommendation is that any Equitime endorsement be limited to the third party liability issue and be conditioned on providing comparable reinsurance to all parties seeking to compete against Equitime.

[I don't understand this pt. In the broader risk insurance bill, the $10b industry retention was for all P&C carriers. Airline insurers would be entitled to a pro rata payment depending on their share of the $10b. If the ratios of airline insurance losses to other industry losses was the same as for the WTC, the airline industry retention would be less than $2b. Am I missing something? KS]. It is an open question whether ~~Thus~~ direct action on the aviation insurance question may still be necessary even with the passage of a broader terrorism bill.

Discussion: Equitime is a very major intrusion into the operation of private insurance markets. It would provide one entity preferred status in the market by virtue of its federal support and it would provide federal subsidies for the replacement of a private market in those parts of the insurance market which are working well. The staff recommendation is that any Equitime endorsement be limited to the third party liability issue and be conditioned on providing comparable reinsurance to all parties seeking to compete against Equitime.

I don't think we want to mention PBOR or risk insurance as "legal reform" issues -- we've been making the case that neither one is tort reform in disguise.

I would say:

Teacher Protection Act, one of campaign commitments, was enacted as part of education bill
Changes to diversity legislation and removal rules, important campaign proposals, are being pursued as part of class action reform bill.
President has consistently opposed legislation that would expose consumers to the costs of excessive, expensive litigation (Senate version of PBOR, versions of corporate governance bills, versions of genetics legislation)
And President has nominated judges who will interpret, rather than make law from the bench, which is an important step in controlling runaway litigation costs.

vandehi is working on a story on political activity for tomorrow. he interviewed Mehlman today. story looks ugly. One thing that jim hooked on to was the idea that we've adjusted some policy priorities based on changes in the political landscape. One example he seized upon is legal reform. He is pointing to the frequent mention of legal reform during the campaign, but he believes that it's not advantageous to be perceived as too "pro-business" and that may be the reason he believes legal reform has dropped of the radar screen.

I believe there have been elements of legal reform in several things that we have pushed - Mehlman mentioned Terrorism Insurance and PBOR, but aren't there others that I can point to?

President Calls for Crime Victims' Rights Amendment

Today's Presidential Action

- In a speech at the Department of Justice, President Bush announced his support of a Federal Constitutional amendment ~~for to protect~~ victims of violent crime. This amendment would ensure that victims' rights ~~the rights of victims are~~ would be fully protected ~~recognized~~ under the Constitution.

Background on Today's Presidential Action

- In 2000 alone, 6.3 million Americans were victims of violent crime. [START NEW BULLET POINT:] During the Presidential campaign, President Bush announced his support for a Federal Constitutional amendment to protect crime victims. Texas is one of 32 states that have state constitutional amendments guaranteeing rights for victims.
- While the states and the federal ~~Federal~~ government have enacted legal protections for crime victims, those laws are insufficient to fully vindicate victims' rights in the criminal justice system.
- Because rights of the accused are specifically included in the Constitution, it is only just and proper that victims' rights be included in the Constitution as well. Further, because victims' rights vary from state to state, the Constitutional amendment would ensures that every ~~all victims citizen have has~~ at least a minimum level of rights in the legal system ~~to victims on the state and Federal level~~.
- Today, the President announced his support for the bipartisan Crime Victims Rights Amendment that has been introduced by Senators Feinstein and Kyl. The amendment would provide victims of violent crime in ~~federal~~ Federal or state court the right to:
 - reasonable and timely notice of any public proceeding involving the crime or the release or escape of the accused;
 - not be excluded from such public proceedings;
 - reasonably be heard at public release, plea, sentencing, reprieve, and pardon proceedings; and
 - decisions that duly consider the victim's: (1) safety; (2) interest in avoiding unreasonable delay; and (3) just and timely claims to restitution from the offender.
- These rights could not be restricted "except when and to the degree dictated by a substantial interest in public safety or the administration of criminal justice, or by compelling necessity." The amendment would not provide the grounds for a new trial, or authorize any claim for damages.
- Any effort to amend the Constitution must be undertaken with great care. The specific language of the Feinstein-Kyl amendment strikes the proper balance in fully protecting victims' rights in America's legal system.

Uneasy Feeling: CFOs Worried About Terror Attacks

Finance chiefs more concerned about attacks at home than abroad.
Stephen Taub, CFO.com
April 16, 2002

More than seven months after the September attacks on U.S. soil, finance executives still fear domestic terrorism attacks.

In fact, about two-thirds of chief financial officers in the United States believe their companies, domestic assets are more of a target than their assets overseas, according to a recent survey commissioned by insurance giant Lloyd's of London and conducted by Harris Interactive. Traditionally, U.S. corporates have seen the Middle East and South America as bigger risks for terrorism.

Of even more significance: 64 percent of CFOs have little or no confidence in the insurance industry's ability to provide a comprehensive package to protect against any future terrorist attacks.

REV_00143285

September 11 has led to a sea change in attitudes toward the need for terrorism cover in the U.S. The attacks showed, with chilling efficiency, how terrorists can strike at the heart of U.S. business interests,⁸ says David James, terrorism underwriter for Ascot Underwriting at Lloyd's. &As a result, insurance buyers have become more focused on the risks, not only in terms of protecting property, but in having access to funds to offset business-interruption concerns. Similarly, insurers and reinsurers have realized this is a separate risk that needs to be studied, rated, and priced separately.⁸

In fact, prior to September 11, the United States accounted for as little as 1 percent of the typical terrorism insurer's book of business. But after September 11, North America has accounted for 80 percent of Ascot's terrorism business, according to Lloyd's.

So how much attention should CFOs pay to business interruption? Hard to say. Lloyd's did note that $10 billion in claims*about 25 percent of the overall World Trade Center insurance bill*can be attributed to business-interruption coverage.

(Editor's Note: On May 1, CFO.com will examine if another 9/11 would derail the U.S. economic recovery and how such an attack would change the business plans of U.S. corporations.)

Here is my proposal.

On Friday, we go to Ortanique from 6-8 pm to celebrate Moose and Lori's departure.

On Saturday, Jim will throw a little shenidig for Moose at his house. (he wants to do this no matter what we do)

Sometime in early May, we have a going-away/baby shower breakfast for Courtney (and maybe Noel).

For Ortanique, if we all pay $20 (excluding Moose, Lori, McNally, Addington, & Bellinger), they will give us a nice appetizer spread and then everything else will be cash bar.

Okay, this is the best deal I've come across.

Ortanique (Libby loves this place)
730 11 St., NW

They can rope off a section of their 2nd floor lounge just for us. No price for bartender or room charge. Cash bar and we pay $200-$300 for appetizers and they will give us what they can for that price.

I say that is insufficient. Several people outside the Office have asked me about this, saying they want to come. I think we could have a large crowd if we e-mail around (and I think Moose deserves as much). If we rent a room at Old Ebbitt, we lawyers pay $30 each and we get a room. Right? Is the room available this Friday from 6 to 8?

Okay so we have only 5 days to put this together and not much of a budget - one suggestion, we can have a happy hour at Red Sage where we occupy the bar area from 5 - 7 pm on Friday. They can't "rope" off a section for us but we will pretty much take over the whole place with our size. This way we pay nothing except for food/drinks. I have told Red Sage to expect us so that they won't plan any happy hours during the time. What do you all say?

Please note: I've never been to this part of Red Sage so I don't know what the bar looks like.

The deadline for filing your annual Public Financial Disclosure Report ("SF 278") is right around the corner, May 15, 2002. Don't miss this deadline. File your SF 278 with our office as soon as possible before May 15, so that you avoid missing the deadline. Your Public Financial Disclosure Report should be submitted to the Office of Counsel to the President, EEOB, Room 158.

You should have received a package of information from our office containing general instructions for filling out the report, your report from last year, and a copy of a blank SF 278 form. If you have any questions in connection with your filing obligations, please contact me in Counsel's Office at 456-5071.

attached are TPs and backgrounder just received from EPA as part of its announcement tomorrow on its response to the DC circuit court remands on: NOx SIP call for electric generating units and revised deadlines for section 126 ozone transport rule. in two separate decisions last year, the DC circuit court issued these 2 clean air act/electric utility-related remands. epa has chosen to "harmonize" the 2 into one response (final rule) given the clean air/utility issue nexus and tight compliance deadlines. and because of the tight court-ordered deadlines, EPA has decided it has to release the final rules without notice and comment. this last fact will surely draw criticism from the regulated community and draw quite a bit of media-attention. i assume (hope) OIRA has been in contact over the last several months with EPA on this decision. and....this decision and surrounding issues are not easily digestible. EPA's backgrounder and TPs help, but may not be enough for our internal WH purposes. CEQ or OMB may want to try to tinker with their TPs for our communicators (eg., Ari) who may likely get a question on this tomorrow when it is released by EPA.

Talking Points: EPA's Response to the DC Circuit Court Remands on Electric Generating Unit Growth Factors and Revised Deadlines for the Section 126 Ozone Transport Rule

- Today EPA is responding to two remands from the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit (the Court). The Court raised issues concerning the growth rates EPA used to calculate allowable emissions of nitrogen oxides (NOX) (known as emission budgets) for large electric generating units (EGUs) in its rules to reduce interstate transport of ozone (the NOX SIP Call and the Section 126 Rule).
- In response to the Court's decisions, EPA reviewed the growth rates the Agency used for EGUs and the methodology used to develop those growth rates. Based on that review, EPA determined that the growth rates and the methodology used to develop them were reasonable.
- Today's response to the Court's remand is not a new or revised rule; rather, it is a clearer explanation of the same growth rates that EPA included in its ozone transport rules. Thus, notice-and-comment rulemaking is not required. Nevertheless, EPA accepted comments following notices dated August 3, 2001 and March 11, 2002. The notices explained that documents were placed in the docket for review and comment. Many parties commented, and EPA has responded to those comments in today's notice.
- Originally, EPA harmonized the compliance deadlines for the two ozone transport rules by establishing a May 1, 2003 compliance date for both rules. Subsequently, the Court delayed the compliance deadline for the NOX SIP Call until May 31, 2004.
- More recently, the Court temporarily suspended the compliance date for EGUs subject to the Section 126 Rule, pending EPA's resolution of the Court remand related to EGU growth rates. Following our response to the remand, we are issuing a rulemaking to establish May 31, 2004 as the Section 126 Rule compliance date, re-aligning it with the deadline established by the D.C. Circuit for the NOX SIP Call.
- While the recent court action does not affect the compliance deadline for non-EGU sources (such as large boilers at chemical plants and paper mills) subject to the Section 126 Rule, we plan to extend their compliance date to be consistent with the other sources.
- The non-EGUs are a very small portion of the sources affected by the Section 126 Rule (about 5 % of the emissions reductions). Many of these sources are small and may plan to purchase emission credits from the larger EGUs. These emissions have minimal public health impact and from a policy perspective, it does not make sense for this small portion of sources to have to comply at an earlier date.
- We intend to issue the final rule to harmonize the Section 126 Rule compliance date with the NOX SIP Call compliance date without prior proposal. This is necessary because the time involved with notice-and-comment rulemaking would extend beyond a critical monitoring compliance date for the rule. EPA is changing that date from May 1, 2002 to May 1, 2003.

Background Information on EPA's Regional Rules to Reduce Ozone Known as the NOx SIP Call and the Section 126 Rule

Public Health

- NOx emissions from facilities in upwind states ~~may~~ can contribute to ground-level ozone pollution (smog) in downwind states. When inhaled – even at very low levels – ground-level ozone can cause acute respiratory problems, aggravate asthma, reduce lung capacity, inflame lung tissue, and impair the body's immune system.

NOx SIP Call

- EPA issued the NOx SIP Call rule in September 1998 as part of its efforts to improve air quality in the eastern half of the U.S. The original rule required 22 states and the District of Columbia to reduce NOx emissions that cross state boundaries, and form ground-level ozone in downwind states.
- On March 3, 2000, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the DC Circuit (the Court) issued an opinion largely upholding the NOx SIP Call. Following the Court's ruling, 19 states and the District of Columbia were required to submit revised SIPs in two phases. The first phase plans, due in October 2000, must contain the measures the states will use to address the portion of the NOx budgets upheld by the Court's decision. The second phase plans are addressed in a February 22, 2002 proposal that responds to issues that the court sent back to EPA for further consideration.
- On August 30, 2000, the Court changed the compliance deadline for the NOx SIP Call from May 1, 2003 to May 31, 2004.
- On June 8, 2001, the Court issued a decision related to heat input growth rates for EGUs used to develop NOx emission budgets in the NOx SIP Call (similar to its May 15, 2001 decision on the Section 126 Rule described below).

Section 126 Rule

- In August 1997, Connecticut, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New York, Rhode Island, Pennsylvania and Vermont filed petitions with EPA to reduce the transport of ground-level ozone pollution through reductions in NOx emissions. The petitions were filed under section 126 of the Clean Air Act, which gives any state the authority to ask EPA to set emissions limits for specific sources of air pollution in another state that significantly contribute to air quality problems in the petitioning state.
- On December 17, 1999, EPA granted petitions filed by Connecticut, Massachusetts, New York, and Pennsylvania. This rule called for direct federal regulation of large utilities and large industrial boilers and turbines in all or part of twelve states and the District of

01/15/02 - Internal EPA Use Only

Columbia. The rule also established a NO_x emissions cap-and-trade system for the regulated sources.

- On May 15, 2001, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the DC Circuit largely upheld the Section 126 Rule, including the findings that sources in 12 states and DC are significantly contributing to smog problems in the petitioning states. At the same time, the Court sent two issues back to EPA for further consideration.
- The Court directed EPA to explain and justify the growth factors the Agency used to estimate 2007 electricity utilization or to develop a new set of growth factors. The Court vacated and sent back to EPA the portion of the rule related to cogeneration units. These facilities produce and sell electricity to the power grid.
- All of the states with sources affected by the Section 126 Rule are also affected by the NO_x SIP Call. Originally, EPA established May 1, 2003 as the deadline for both rules and provided a mechanism by which if states stayed on track to meet their NO_x SIP Call obligations, EPA would withdraw the federal Section 126 Rule requirements for sources in that state.

Talking Points: EPA's Response to the DC Circuit Court Remands on Electric Generating Unit Growth Factors and Revised Deadlines for the Section 126 Ozone Transport Rule

- Today EPA is responding to two remands from the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit (the Court). The Court raised issues concerning the growth rates EPA used to calculate allowable emissions of nitrogen oxides (NOX) (known as emission budgets) for large electric generating units (EGUs) in its rules to reduce interstate transport of ozone (the NOX SIP Call and the Section 126 Rule).
- In response to the Court's decisions, EPA reviewed the growth rates the Agency used for EGUs and the methodology used to develop those growth rates. Based on that review, EPA determined that the growth rates and the methodology used to develop them were reasonable.
- Today's response to the Court's remand is not a new or revised rule; rather, it is a clearer explanation of the same growth rates that EPA included in its ozone transport rules. Thus, notice-and-comment rulemaking is not required. Nevertheless, EPA accepted comments following notices dated August 3, 2001 and March 11, 2002. The notices explained that documents were placed in the docket for review and comment. Many parties commented, and EPA has responded to those comments in today's notice.
- Originally, EPA harmonized the compliance deadlines for the two ozone transport rules by establishing a May 1, 2003 compliance date for both rules. Subsequently, the Court delayed the compliance deadline for the NOX SIP Call until May 31, 2004.
- More recently, the Court temporarily suspended the compliance date for EGUs subject to the Section 126 Rule, pending EPA's resolution of the Court remand related to EGU growth rates. Following our response to the remand, we are issuing a rulemaking to establish May 31, 2004 as the Section 126 Rule compliance date, re-aligning it with the deadline established by the D.C. Circuit for the NOX SIP Call.
- While the recent court action does not affect the compliance deadline for non-EGU sources (such as large boilers at chemical plants and paper mills) subject to the Section 126 Rule, we plan to extend their compliance date to be consistent with the other sources.
- The non-EGUs are a very small portion of the sources affected by the Section 126 Rule (about 5 % of the emissions reductions). Many of these sources are small and may plan to purchase emission credits from the larger EGUs. These emissions have minimal public health impact and from a policy perspective, it does not make sense for this small portion of sources to have to comply at an earlier date.
- We intend to issue the final rule to harmonize the Section 126 Rule compliance date with the NOX SIP Call compliance date without prior proposal. This is necessary because the time involved with notice-and-comment rulemaking would extend beyond a critical monitoring compliance date for the rule. EPA is changing that date from May 1, 2002 to May 1, 2003.

Background Information on EPA's Regional Rules to Reduce Ozone Known as the NOx SIP Call and the Section 126 Rule

Public Health

- NOx emissions from facilities in upwind states ~~may~~ can contribute to ground-level ozone pollution (smog) in downwind states. When inhaled – even at very low levels – ground-level ozone can cause acute respiratory problems, aggravate asthma, reduce lung capacity, inflame lung tissue, and impair the body's immune system.

NOx SIP Call

- EPA issued the NOx SIP Call rule in September 1998 as part of its efforts to improve air quality in the eastern half of the U.S. The original rule required 22 states and the District of Columbia to reduce NOx emissions that cross state boundaries, and form ground-level ozone in downwind states.
- On March 3, 2000, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the DC Circuit (the Court) issued an opinion largely upholding the NOx SIP Call. Following the Court's ruling, 19 states and the District of Columbia were required to submit revised SIPs in two phases. The first phase plans, due in October 2000, must contain the measures the states will use to address the portion of the NOx budgets upheld by the Court's decision. The second phase plans are addressed in a February 22, 2002 proposal that responds to issues that the court sent back to EPA for further consideration.
- On August 30, 2000, the Court changed the compliance deadline for the NOx SIP Call from May 1, 2003 to May 31, 2004.
- On June 8, 2001, the Court issued a decision related to heat input growth rates for EGUs used to develop NOx emission budgets in the NOx SIP Call (similar to its May 15, 2001 decision on the Section 126 Rule described below).

Section 126 Rule

- In August 1997, Connecticut, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New York, Rhode Island, Pennsylvania and Vermont filed petitions with EPA to reduce the transport of ground-level ozone pollution through reductions in NOx emissions. The petitions were filed under section 126 of the Clean Air Act, which gives any state the authority to ask EPA to set emissions limits for specific sources of air pollution in another state that significantly contribute to air quality problems in the petitioning state.
- On December 17, 1999, EPA granted petitions filed by Connecticut, Massachusetts, New York, and Pennsylvania. This rule called for direct federal regulation of large utilities and large industrial boilers and turbines in all or part of twelve states and the District of

Columbia. The rule also established a NO_x emissions cap-and-trade system for the regulated sources.

- On May 15, 2001, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the DC Circuit largely upheld the Section 126 Rule, including the findings that sources in 12 states and DC are significantly contributing to smog problems in the petitioning states. At the same time, the Court sent two issues back to EPA for further consideration.
- The Court directed EPA to explain and justify the growth factors the Agency used to estimate 2007 electricity utilization or to develop a new set of growth factors. The Court vacated and sent back to EPA the portion of the rule related to cogeneration units. These facilities produce and sell electricity to the power grid.
- All of the states with sources affected by the Section 126 Rule are also affected by the NO_x SIP Call. Originally, EPA established May 1, 2003 as the deadline for both rules and provided a mechanism by which if states stayed on track to meet their NO_x SIP Call obligations, EPA would withdraw the federal Section 126 Rule requirements for sources in that state.

1. The Allen-Harkin-Smith bill apparently is being announced at 3:00 today.

2. In addition, as you know, State circulated through the OMB clearance process a proposed letter on section 15(e) in HR 3210, the provision on use of blocked assets to satisfy judgments.

3. I assume our approach is (i) States should not send the letter on HR 3210; and (ii) at appropriate time, State will oppose Allen-Harkin-Smith. If that is not the case, or there needs to be further discussion, we obviously should meet and/or discuss.

4. On the issue whether Administration should propose a terrorism victims compensation plan, I understand that State sent a memo to Nancy. If there has been any change in thinking, or we need to discuss again, we should meet about that as well. If not, I assume we will await further developments in Congress.

The Council of Insurance Agents and Brokers says it has gathered data that confirms last week's announcement by President Bush that Congress' failure to enact a federal backstop for terrorist acts is causing widespread economic distress. The Council's commercial insurance market index, released today, indicates that insurers "have responded to the Sept. 11 attacks by placing sharp restrictions on their risk exposures * not only to terrorism, but also to a variety of hazards, including asbestos, mold, windstorms, earthquakes and others. The survey data shows the marketplace, which had been hardening more than two years before the attacks, is experiencing sharply higher premiums, higher deductions, lower limits and restricted capacity from coast to coast and across the major lines of commercial insurance." The House passed legislation last November, but the Senate has yet to act. "We're seeing the trickle-down effect of rate increases," said Ken Crerar, president of the Council, adding: "Over the last three months, we have moved beyond initial difficulty with high-profile or high-exposure properties to an environment where the broader marketplace is affected. Leaders from throughout the industry have warned Congress that action is needed and needed now.

-- I think we could use more info about her focus.
-- Also, on Olson, he knows this stuff cold. But Olson's history might make it a little odd for him to talk for the Administration about this. He was head of OLC and advised asserting executive privilege over certain EPA documents; an independent counsel later was appointed to investigate whether he made false statements in a congressional investigation of Justice's privilege assertion; Olson then challenged the constitutionality of the IC statute, which was resolved against him (7-1) by Supreme Court in Morrison v. Olson (1988). In some ways, he symbolizes what can happen when executive-congressional relations melt down.

Allison Mitchell is working on a large story about the balance of power. She has asked to talk to the Judge, but was interested in talking to anyone who might be able to offer some insight into our thinking.

As I remember, in the past, we have referred to the need to restore an appropriate balance of power, but haven't gone into much detail. It's always been a component of another issue. I know she wants to talk about the specific ways we see that executive power eroded during the Clinton administration, etc.

REV_00143317

She also mentioned the VP's interest in the issue.

I certainly think someone (the Judge) should talk with her, but need some input on approach.

Thanks.

The deadline for filing your annual Public Financial Disclosure Report ("SF 278") is right around the corner, May 15, 2002. Don't miss this deadline. File your SF 278 with our office as soon as possible before May 15, so that you avoid missing the deadline. Your Public Financial Disclosure Report should be submitted to the Office of Counsel to the President, EEOB, Room 158.

You should have received a package of information from our office containing general instructions for filling out the report, your report from last year, and a copy of a blank SF 278 form. If you have any questions in connection with your filing obligations, please contact me in Counsel's Office at 456-5071.

Brett-

Can you talk to the lawyers and determine whether or not they will all be contributing or not? Some are not able to attend (Brad, Helgi, David) and I don't know if they will want to chip in or not.

We are attempting to get a ballpark figure on what we can expect to raise so we can order appetizers.

PS - Moose and Lori both gave us a list of folks to invite. (Moose - 30 and Lori - 10). With POTUS out of town and IMF rallys I really don't expect that everyone will come but they wanted to at least extend and invite.

Thanks!

The Council of Insurance Agents and Brokers says it has gathered data that confirms last week's announcement by President Bush that Congress' failure to enact a federal backstop for terrorist acts is causing widespread economic distress. The Council's commercial insurance market index, released today, indicates that insurers "have responded to the Sept. 11 attacks by placing sharp restrictions on their risk exposures * not only to terrorism, but also to a variety of hazards, including asbestos, mold, windstorms, earthquakes and others. The survey data shows the marketplace, which had been hardening more than two years before the attacks, is experiencing sharply higher premiums, higher deductions, lower limits and restricted capacity from coast to coast and across the major lines of commercial insurance." The House passed legislation last November, but the Senate has yet to act. "We're seeing the trickle-down effect of rate increases," said Ken Crerar, president of the Council, adding: "Over the last three months, we have moved beyond initial difficulty with high-profile or high-exposure properties to an environment where the broader marketplace is affected. Leaders from throughout the industry have warned Congress that action is needed and needed now.

(House Rules)

H.R. 586 - Fairness for Foster Care Families Act of 2001

(Rep. Lewis (R) Kentucky and 49 cosponsors)

The Administration strongly supports House passage of the Tax Relief Guarantee Act of 2002. The Administration understands that H.R. 586 is now being used as a vehicle for consideration of the Tax Relief Guarantee Act. The Administration is particularly pleased that the House is acting to make the President's tax relief plan permanent.

The Economic Growth and Tax Relief Reconciliation Act of 2001 provides much needed tax relief to the American people and lays the foundation for further long-term economic growth. The key elements of this relief are: a reduction in income tax rates, including a new low 10 percent rate; elimination of the death tax; an increase in the child tax credit from $500 to $1,000 per child; and a reduction in the marriage penalty. Unfortunately, this relief expires at the end of 2010. Failure to make this tax relief permanent would penalize:

- 43 million married couples whose taxes, on average, would be increased by $1,730;
- 38 million families with children who would suffer an average tax increase of $1,463, losing money that goes to education, childcare, and other expenses;
- 11 million single mothers with children who would lose, on average, $780 of their income;
- 13 million seniors whose taxes would be increased by $924 on average; and
- 3.9 million individuals and families who would have to start paying income taxes again.

The Administration urges quick action in the Congress so that Americans can make their plans for the future today.

The Administration is also pleased that the legislation includes taxpayer protection and Internal Revenue Service (IRS) accountability provisions proposed in the President's budget, notably the 15-day filing extension for electronically filed tax returns.

Pay-As-You-Go-Scoring

Any law that would reduce receipts or increase direct spending is subject to the PAYGO requirements of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act (BEA) and could cause a sequester of mandatory programs in any fiscal year through 2006. The requirement to score PAYGO costs expires on September 30, 2002, and there are no discretionary caps beyond 2002. Until there is agreement on extending the BEA, the Administration will consider the President's budget as a binding budgetary constraint. The cost of this bill exceeds the President's budget. The Administration will work with Congress to return to budget surpluses and to ensure that any unintended sequester of spending does not occur.

Border Security, Terrorism Reinsurance Negotiations Stall
Senators from both sides of the aislesignaled Tuesday that border security legislation probably would not be back on the agenda before next week, as bill sponsors struggled to find common ground with Sen. Robert Byrd, D-W.Va.
Byrd has signaled he will offer more than one amendment, and some are expected to be contentious. Sen. Jon Kyl, R-Ariz., one of the sponsors of the border security bill, told reporters an attempt would be made to work with Byrd to resolve his "big" concerns ahead of time.
Byrd has indicated dissatisfaction with the legislation on many counts, and Kyl said he had reports that Byrd also might seek to offer an amendment on restructuring
the Immigration and Naturalization Service.
The Senate Judiciary Committee is in the midst of crafting an
INS restructuring bill.
While noting it was "possible" the Senate could return to the issue this week, Majority
Leader Daschle said discussions about the bill were between Judiciary

Immigration

Subcommittee Chairman Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., and Byrd.

Meanwhile, senators working on legislation pertaining to terrorism reinsurance appear to have different impressions of where the debate stands.

Daschle said Tuesday no compromise had yet been reached to bring the measure to the floor.

However, Senate Banking ranking member Phil Gramm, R-Texas,

insisted that he thought he and Daschle had reached an agreement last week. He said he was surprised by press reports to the contrary.

According to Gramm, he and Daschle had agreed the Senate would use a compromise version of the legislation they and other senators brokered late last year,

as the starting point for floor action.

Various "compromise" versions were in the works at that time,

but Gramm

said the compromise he was referring to had called for a kind of "private insurance

program."

That bill was largely silent on liability issues because senators were in the midst of hammering out the details when "everything blew up last year,"

Gramm

said.

Gramm said he had spoken to Daschle about using the bill as the base text

and seeking some sort of accord on the liability issue, "or a jump ball. I thought that was acceptable," Gramm said.

Sen. Bill Nelson, D-Fla., a former insurance commissioner who tried to broker

a compromise of his own last year, was pessimistic

Tuesday when asked about the reinsurance bill's prospects. "I think

it's a nonstarter," he said.

I would like to have the Judge talk to Allison Mitchell for the balance of power story this afternoon or earlier in the day tomorrrw.

Allison checked the Judge's calendar and it appears that he has some time late this afternoon. Is that enough head's up time?

Border Security, Terrorism Reinsurance Negotiations Stall
Senators from both sides of the aislesignaled Tuesday that border security legislation
probably would not be back on the agenda before next week, as bill sponsors struggled to find common ground with Sen. Robert Byrd, D-W.Va.
Byrd has signaled he will offer more than one amendment, and some are expected to be contentious. Sen. Jon Kyl, R-Ariz., one of the sponsors of the border security bill, told reporters
an attempt would be made to work with Byrd to resolve his "big" concerns ahead of time.
Byrd has indicated dissatisfaction with the legislation on many counts, and Kyl said he had reports that Byrd also might seek to offer an amendment on restructuring
the Immigration and Naturalization Service.
The Senate Judiciary Committee is in the midst of crafting an
INS restructuring bill.
While noting it was "possible" the Senate could return to the issue this week, Majority
Leader Daschle said discussions about the bill were between Judiciary

REV_00143362

Immigration

Subcommittee Chairman Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., and Byrd.

Meanwhile, senators working on legislation pertaining to terrorism reinsurance appear to have different impressions of where the debate stands.

Daschle said Tuesday no compromise had yet been reached to bring the measure to the floor.

However, Senate Banking ranking member Phil Gramm, R-Texas,

insisted that he thought he and Daschle had reached an agreement last week. He said he was surprised by press reports to the contrary.

According to Gramm, he and Daschle had agreed the Senate would use a compromise version of the legislation they and other senators brokered

late last year,

as the starting point for floor action.

Various "compromise" versions were in the works at that time,

but Gramm

said the compromise he was referring to had called for a kind of "private insurance

program."

That bill was largely silent on liability issues because

senators were in the midst of hammering out the details when "everything blew up last year,"

Gramm

said.

Gramm said he had spoken to Daschle about using the bill as the base text

and seeking some sort of accord on the liability issue, "or a jump ball. I thought that was acceptable," Gramm said.

Sen. Bill Nelson, D-Fla., a former insurance commissioner who tried to broker

a compromise of his own last year, was pessimistic

Tuesday when asked about the reinsurance bill's prospects. "I think

it's a

nonstarter," he said.

Subject: Justice White Funeral; Question

Sally Rider, the Administrative Assistant to Chief Justice Rehnquist, has asked whether any White House officials plan to attend Justice White's funeral on Friday. She said that, if there is a White House plane going to Colorado, at least three of the Justices (plus a spouse or two) would like to ride along.

I think tomorrow morning would be better. That way, I can gather the benefit of OLC's full analysis of the issue (almost, but not completely done), which could be useful for briefing Judge before the interview. But if that does not work, let me know.

I would like to have the Judge talk to Allison Mitchell for the balance of power story this afternoon or earlier in the day tomorrw.

Allison checked the Judge's calendar and it appears that he has some time late this afternoon. Is that enough head's up time?

Subject: Justice White Funeral; Question

Sally Rider, the Administrative Assistant to Chief Justice Rehnquist, has asked whether any White House officials plan to attend Justice White's funeral on Friday. She said that, if there is a White House plane going to Colorado, at least three of the Justices (plus a spouse or two) would like to ride along.

Govs Urge Terror Insurance, Execs Point To Private Market
Eighteen governors, including Republican Gov. Jeb Bush of Florida, sent a letter to House and Senate leaders Wednesday, urging them to act on federal legislation to mitigate the high cost of insurance coverage of terrorist attacks.

"Since late December, the lack of a financial backstop has started to ripple through the economy and will continue to do so," they wrote.

"As governors, we are facing many critical issues resulting from the Sept. 11 crisis. The emerging problem in insurance coverage only serves to exacerbate our recovery efforts," they added.

However, a different view emanated from the private sector this week. Not only is terrorism insurance available, but the price has fallen in the past six months, according to executives associated with the Lloyd's of London syndicate, BestWire news service reported Wednesday.

REV_00143549

"It's been frustrating to see a lot of press coverage about the unavailability of terror cover, when, in fact, there's a very active and maturing market," said David James, terrorism underwriter for Ascot Underwriting Ltd. at Lloyd's. He also said he did not believe a U.S. government-backed terrorism backstop was necessary.

Govs Urge Terror Insurance, Execs Point To Private Market
Eighteen governors, including Republican Gov. Jeb Bush of Florida, sent a letter to House and Senate leaders Wednesday, urging them to act on federal legislation to mitigate the high cost of insurance coverage of terrorist attacks.

"Since late December, the lack of a financial backstop has started to ripple through the economy and will continue to do so," they wrote.

"As governors, we are facing many critical issues resulting from the Sept. 11 crisis. The emerging problem in insurance coverage only serves to exacerbate our recovery efforts," they added.

However, a different view emanated from the private sector this week. Not only is terrorism insurance available, but the price has fallen in the past six months, according to executives associated with the Lloyd's of London syndicate, BestWire news service reported Wednesday.

REV_00143552

"It's been frustrating to see a lot of press coverage about the unavailability of terror cover, when, in fact, there's a very active and maturing market," said David James, terrorism underwriter for Ascot Underwriting Ltd. at Lloyd's. He also said he did not believe a U.S. government-backed terrorism backstop was necessary.

(House)

H.R. 586 - Fairness for Foster Care Families Act of 2001
(Rep. Lewis (R) Kentucky and 49 cosponsors)

The Administration strongly supports House passage of the Tax Relief Guarantee Act of 2002. The Administration understands that H.R. 586 is now being used as a vehicle for consideration of the Tax Relief Guarantee Act. The Administration is particularly pleased that the House is acting to make the President's tax relief plan permanent.

The Economic Growth and Tax Relief Reconciliation Act of 2001 provides much needed tax relief to the American people and lays the foundation for further long-term economic growth. The key elements of this relief are: a reduction in income tax rates, including a new low 10 percent rate; elimination of the death tax; an increase in the child tax credit from $500 to $1,000 per child; and a reduction in the marriage penalty. Unfortunately, this relief expires at the end of 2010. Failure to make this tax relief permanent would penalize:

-- 43 million married couples whose taxes, on average, would be increased by $1,730;

-- 11 million single mothers with children who would lose, on average, $780 of their income;

-- 13 million seniors whose taxes would be increased by $924 on average; and

-- 3.9 million individuals and families who would have to start paying income taxes again.

The Administration urges quick action in the Congress so that Americans can make their plans for the future today.

The Administration is also pleased that the legislation includes taxpayer protection and Internal Revenue Service (IRS) accountability provisions proposed in the President's budget, notably the 15-day filing extension for electronically filed tax returns.

Pay-As-You-Go-Scoring

Any law that would reduce receipts or increase direct spending is subject to the PAYGO requirements of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act (BEA) and could cause a sequester of mandatory programs in any fiscal year through 2006. The requirement to score PAYGO costs expires on September 30, 2002, and there are no discretionary caps beyond 2002. The Administration will work with Congress to ensure fiscal discipline consistent with the President's budget and a quick return to budget surpluses. The Administration will also work with Congress to ensure that any unintended sequester of spending does not occur.

OMB/LA Clearance:

Administration Position to Date

The Administration has not previously taken a position on H.R. 586. Our understanding is that H.R. 586 is being used as a vehicle for consideration of the Tax Relief Guarantee Act, which would repeal the sunset provision of last year's tax bill and provide for increased taxpayer protection and Internal Revenue Service accountability. The bill is scheduled to be considered on the House floor on Thursday, April 18th. Our understanding of the provisions of the Tax Relief Guarantee Act is based on information from the Department of the Treasury.

Major Provisions of the Tax Relief Guarantee Act

The Economic Growth and Tax Relief Reconciliation Act (EGTRRA) of 2001 (P.L. 107-16 enacted June 7, 2001) reduces individual income tax rates, increases the child tax credit, eliminates the estate tax, reduces the marriage penalty, expands Education IRAs, and makes several other changes to provisions of tax law, including retirement savings and pension provisions, other education provisions, and benefits relating to children. The provisions of EGTRRA sunset on December 31, 2010. The Tax Relief Guarantee Act would make these provisions permanent. The Tax Relief Guarantee Act also includes proposals from H.R. 3991, the Taxpayer Protection and IRS Accountability Act, which was defeated by a vote of 205-219 on the House floor on April 10th. The bill that was defeated included a provision to eliminate certain campaign reporting requirements under section 527 of the Internal Revenue Code. This provision is not part of the Tax Relief Guarantee Act.

Tax Reductions Made Permanent

Following are short descriptions of the major provisions of EGTRRA that would be made permanent, along with the Joint Committee on Taxation's (JCT) very preliminary estimates of the revenue effect of making them permanent.

Marginal Rate Reduction. EGTRRA establishes a 10-percent rate bracket for the first $6,000 of taxable income for single individuals ($7,000 for 2008 and thereafter), the first $10,000 of taxable income for heads of households, and the first $12,000 for married couples filing joint returns ($14,000 for 2008 and thereafter). Also, under EGTRRA, the regular individual income tax rates of 28 percent, 31 percent, 36 percent, and 39.6 percent are phased down over six years to 25 percent, 28 percent, 33 percent, and 35 percent. (JCT estimated revenue effect for FY 2011: -$83.1 billion; FY 2012: -$123.8 billion; and FY 2002-2012: -$206.9 billion.)

Increase and Expansion of the Child Tax Credit. EGTRRA increases the child tax credit from $500 to $1,000, phased-in over a ten-year period. EGTRRA makes the child credit refundable for up to 10 percent of a taxpayer's earned income in excess of $10,000 for calendar years 2001-2004. This percentage is increased to 15 percent for calendar years 2005 and thereafter. (JCT estimated revenue effect for FY 2011: -$6.0 billion; FY 2012: -$30.0 billion; and FY 2002-2012: -$36.0 billion.)

Estate and Gift Taxes Reduction and Estate Tax Repeal. EGTRRA reduces estate, gift, and generation-skipping transfer taxes over ten years and repeal these taxes for estates of decedents dying and for gifts and generation-skipping transfers made after December 31, 2010. (JCT estimated revenue effect for FY 2003: -$1.2 billion; FY 2003-2007: -$9.2 billion; and FY 2003-2012: -$99.4 billion.)

Marriage Penalty Relief Provisions. EGTRRA increases the basic standard deduction for a married couple filing a joint return to twice the basic standard deduction for an unmarried individual filing a single return. This increase is phased-in over five years beginning in 2005 and would be fully phased-in for 2009 and thereafter. Also, EGTRRA increases the end point of the 15-percent regular income tax rate bracket for a married couple filing a joint return to twice the size of the corresponding rate bracket for an unmarried individual filing a single return. (JCT estimated revenue effect for FY 2011: -$5.7 billion; FY 2012: -$10.4 billion; and FY 2002-2012: -$16.1 billion.)

Retirement Savings and Pensions. EGTRRA makes numerous changes to pension and retirement savings laws. It modifies the individual retirement account (IRA) contribution limits by: (1) increasing the annual limit for IRA contributions from $2,000 to $3,000 in 2002, $4,000 in 2005, and $5,000 in 2008; and (2) allowing individuals who have attained age 50 before the end of the taxable year an additional "catch-up" contribution of $500 in years 2002 through 2005, and $1,000 in 2006 and thereafter. (JCT estimated revenue effect for FY 2011: -$2.5 billion; FY 2012: -$5.1 billion; and FY 2002-2012: -$7.6 billion.)

Education Incentives Provisions. EGTRRA permits taxpayers a deduction for qualified higher education expenses paid by the taxpayer during a taxable year. Also, EGTRRA increases the limit on annual contributions to Education (Ed) IRAs for a beneficiary from $500 to $2,000, and increases the income phase-out ranges for eligibility for the student loan interest deduction. (JCT estimated revenue effect for FY 2011: -$2.4 billion; FY 2012: -$3.2 billion; and FY 2002-2012: -$5.6 billion.)

Taxpayer Protection and IRS Accountability

Major provisions related to taxpayer protection and IRS accountability includes the following.

Application of Federal Tax Deposit Penalty. Under current law, a penalty is imposed on taxpayers who fail to make deposits of Federal taxes owed. A 10 percent penalty rate automatically applies if a deposit is not made in the manner required. The bill would provide that the 10 percent penalty rate would only apply in cases where the failure to deposit extends for more than 15 days. This provision of the bill would be effective on the date of enactment. (Joint Committee on Taxation (JCT) estimated revenue effect for FY 2002: loss of less than $500,000; FY 2003: -$5 million; FYs 2002-2007: -$27 million; FYs 2002-2012: -$54 million.)

Failure to Pay Estimated Tax. Under current law, a penalty is imposed if taxpayers failed to make quarterly deposits of estimated taxes. Taxpayers do not have to pay a penalty for failure to pay estimated tax when the amount of tax owed is less than $1,000. The bill would convert the penalty for failure to pay estimated tax into an interest provision. The bill would increase from $1,000 to $2,000 the amount of taxes owed before interest would be applied. This provision of the bill would be effective for estimated tax payments made for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2002. (JCT estimated revenue effect for FY 2002: $0; FY 2003: $0; FYs 2002-2007: -$300 million; FYs 2002-2012: -$728 million.)

Interest on Overpayments of Income Tax by Individuals. Under current law, interest paid to taxpayers on overpayments of Federal income tax is included in gross income. The bill would exclude payment of overpayment interest from gross income. The exclusion from income of overpayment interest would not apply if the Secretary determines that the taxpayer's principal purpose for overpaying his or her tax is to take advantage of the exclusion. This provision of the bill would be effective for interest received in calendar years beginning after the date of enactment. (JCT estimated revenue effect for FY 2002: $0; FY 2003: $963 million; FYs 2002-2007: $559 million; FYs 2002-2012: -$22 million.)

Abatement of Interest. Current law allows the Treasury to abate interest in certain circumstances. The rule abating interest in the case of erroneous refunds does not apply if the amount of the erroneous refund exceeds $50,000. The bill would eliminate the $50,000 threshold for abatement of interest on erroneous refunds. The bill would require Treasury to abate interest on any erroneous refund, provided the taxpayer has not in any way caused the erroneous refund to occur. Also, the bill would require Treasury to abate interest on an underpayment where the underpayment is attributable to erroneous advice furnished to the taxpayer in writing by an officer or employee of the IRS acting in his or her official capacity. The changes made by these provisions would be effective with respect to interest accruing on or after the date of enactment. (JCT estimated revenue effect for FY 2002: -$0; FY 2003: less than $500,000; FYs 2002-2007: -$5 million; FYs 2002-2012: -$18 million.)

Cash Deposits. Under current law, interest on underpayments and overpayments continues to accrue during the period that a taxpayer and the IRS dispute a liability. The bill would allow a taxpayer to deposit cash with the IRS that the could subsequently be used to pay an underpayment of income, gift, estate, generation-skipping, or certain excise taxes. Under the bill, interest would not be charged on the portion of underpayment that is paid by the deposited amount for the period the amount is on deposit. This provision of the bill would apply to deposits made after the date of enactment. Amounts already on deposit as of the date of enactment would be treated as deposited on the date the taxpayer identifies the amount as a deposit made pursuant to this provision. (JCT estimated revenue effect for FY 2002: $19 million; FY 2003: $76 million; FYs 2002-2007: $130 million; FYs 2002-2012: $104 million.)

Waiver of Certain Penalties for First-Time Unintentional Minor Errors. The bill would explicitly permit the IRS to waive penalties for unintentional minor errors that are committed by a taxpayer with a good history of tax compliance and the penalty for which would be disproportionate to the amount involved. This provision of the bill would be effective after December 31, 2002. (JCT estimated revenue effect for FY 2002: $0; FY 2003: -$15 million; FYs 2002-2007: -$78 million; FYs 2002-2012: -$168 million.)

Installment Agreements for Partial Payment. Under current law, the IRS can permit a taxpayer to pay taxes owed through installment payments; however, the installment agreement must provide for the full repayment of the amount owed. The bill would allow the IRS to enter into installment agreements that do not provide for the full repayment of the taxpayer's liability. This provision of the bill would be effective for installment agreements entered into on or after the date of enactment. (JCT estimated revenue effect for FY 2002: $11 million; FY 2003: $30 million; FYs 2002-2007: $61 million; FYs 2002-2012: $63 million.)

Extend Time Limit for Contesting IRS Levy. Current law authorizes the IRS to return property that has been wrongfully levied upon. In general, monetary proceeds may be returned within 9 months of the date of the levy. The bill would extend the period during which a taxpayer may contest an IRS levy from 9 months to 2 years. This provision of the bill would be effective on the date of enactment. (JCT estimated revenue effect for FY 2002: $0; FY 2003: -$1 million; FYs 2002-2007: -$11 million; FYs 2002-2012: -$29 million.)

Confirmation of Tax Court Authority to Apply Equitable Recoupment. Under current law, "equitable recoupment" generally allows a taxpayer to defeat a claim by demonstrating that he or she has an offsetting claim from the same transaction, even when that offsetting claim would normally be barred due to the statute of limitations. The bill would permit the U.S. Tax Court to apply the principle of "equitable recoupment" in the same manner that it is currently applied in Federal civil tax cases in the U.S. District Court or the U.S. Court of Claims. This provision of the bill would be effective for any action or proceeding in the Tax Court with respect to which a decision has not become final as of the date of enactment.

Collection Due Process Cases in the Tax Court. The bill would consolidate all judicial review of collection due process determinations in the United States Tax Court. Currently, these cases can be heard in tax courts or Federal courts. This provision of the bill would apply to judicial appeals filed after the date of enactment.

Office of Chief Counsel Review of Offers-in-Compromise. The bill would repeal the requirement that an offer-in-compromise of $50,000 or more must be supported by a written opinion from the Office of Chief Counsel. Under the bill, written opinions must only be provided if the Secretary determines that an opinion is required with respect to a compromise. This provision of the bill would apply to offers-in-compromise submitted or pending on or after the date of enactment.

Extend the Due Date for Electronically Filed Tax Returns. Under current law, individuals must file their income tax returns and pay the full amount owed by April 15. The bill would extend the due date for filing and paying individual income taxes to April 30 provided that the taxpayer files the return electronically and pays the entire balance due electronically by that date. The due date for filing by any other method, or for filing electronically but paying the balance due by non-electronic means, would not be changed. This provision of the bill would be effective for returns filed after December 31, 2002.

Requests for Disclosure of Collection Activities. Current law requires a former spouse to submit a written request in order to obtain information regarding collection activities relating to a joint return. The bill would eliminate the written request requirement from former spouse. This provision of the bill would apply to requests made after the date of enactment.

Disclosure of Non-Party Information in Tax Proceedings. The bill would require that information in the tax return of an individual who is not party to a proceeding be disclosed only when it directly relates to the resolution of the issue in dispute. Under the bill, the nonparty taxpayer would have to be notified (or a reasonable effort made to give notice) and the nonparty taxpayer could request that certain information in the return not be disclosed. This provision of the bill would apply to proceedings commenced after the date of enactment.

Compliance By Contractors with Confidentiality Safeguards. Current law permits the disclosure of returns and return information to State agencies, as well as to other Federal agencies for specified purposes. The bill would require that a State and Federal agencies conduct annual on-site reviews of all of their contractors receiving Federal returns and return information. The bill would require each State and Federal agency to submit a report of its findings to the IRS and certify annually that all contractors are in compliance with the requirements to safeguard the confidentiality of Federal returns and return information. This provision of the bill would be effective for disclosures made after December 31, 2002. The first certification would be required to be made with respect to calendar year 2003.

Higher Standards for Requests for and Consents to Disclosure. The bill would provide that a consent form authorizing the disclosure of an individual's tax return information to a third party must designate a recipient for the information and be dated at the time of execution in order to be valid. The bill would impose civil and criminal penalties for violators. The bill would require third parties receiving the information to ensure that the information will be kept confidential, used only for the purpose for which it was requested, and not further disclosed except to accomplish the purpose for which it was requested. Also, the bill would require the inspector general for tax administration to submit a report to Congress with 18 months of enactment on compliance with these requirements. This provision of the bill would apply to requests and consents made after 3 months after the date of enactment.

Unauthorized Browsing of Taxpayer Returns. The bill would require the IRS to notify a taxpayer that his or her return has been disclosed or inspected without authorization when the inspector general determines that such an unauthorized disclosure or inspection has taken place. (Under current law, this notification occurs only when the offender has been criminally charged.) Under the bill, the inspector general would also be required to include in its public annual report to the Joint Committee on Taxation information on all unauthorized disclosures or inspections. This provision of the bill would be effective upon date of enactment as it relates to notifying the taxpayer of determinations of an unlawful disclosure or inspection. The annual report requirement provision would be effective for calendar years ending after the date of enactment.

Pay-As-You-Go Scoring

According to BRD (Barth), the Tax Relief Guarantee Act would affect receipts and direct spending; therefore, it would be subject to the pay-as-you-go requirements of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990. The Treasury Department has not yet completed estimates of the revenue provisions of the Tax Relief Guarantee Act. The Joint Committee on Taxation's very preliminary estimates are that the revenue provisions of the Tax Relief Guarantee Act would have a net budget savings $30 million in FY 2002, and net budget costs of $102 million in FY 2003, $8.9 billion over six years from FYs 2002-2007, and $373.7 billion over eleven years from FYs 2002-2012.

OMB/LA Clearance:

Administration Position to Date

The Administration has not previously taken a position on H.R. 586. Our understanding is that H.R. 586 is being used as a vehicle for consideration of the Tax Relief Guarantee Act, which would repeal the sunset provision of last year's tax bill and provide for increased taxpayer protection and Internal Revenue Service accountability. The bill is scheduled to be considered on the House floor on Thursday, April 18th. Our understanding of the provisions of the Tax Relief Guarantee Act is based on information from the Department of the Treasury.

Major Provisions of the Tax Relief Guarantee Act

The Economic Growth and Tax Relief Reconciliation Act (EGTRRA) of 2001 (P.L. 107-16 enacted June 7, 2001) reduces individual income tax rates, increases the child tax credit, eliminates the estate tax, reduces the marriage penalty, expands Education IRAs, and makes several other changes to provisions of tax law, including retirement savings and pension provisions, other education provisions, and benefits relating to children. The provisions of EGTRRA sunset on December 31, 2010. The Tax Relief Guarantee Act would make these provisions permanent. The Tax Relief Guarantee Act also includes proposals from H.R. 3991, the Taxpayer Protection and IRS Accountability Act, which was defeated by a vote of 205-219 on the House floor on April 10th. The bill that was defeated included a provision to eliminate certain campaign reporting requirements under section 527 of the Internal Revenue Code. This provision is not part of the Tax Relief Guarantee Act.

Tax Reductions Made Permanent

Following are short descriptions of the major provisions of EGTRRA that would be made permanent, along with the Joint Committee on Taxation's (JCT) very preliminary estimates of the revenue effect of making them permanent.

Marginal Rate Reduction. EGTRRA establishes a 10-percent rate bracket for the first $6,000 of taxable income for single individuals ($7,000 for 2008 and thereafter), the first $10,000 of taxable income for heads of households, and the first $12,000 for married couples filing joint returns ($14,000 for 2008 and thereafter). Also, under EGTRRA, the regular individual income tax rates of 28 percent, 31 percent, 36 percent, and 39.6 percent are phased down over six years to 25 percent, 28 percent, 33 percent, and 35 percent. (JCT estimated revenue effect for FY 2011: -$83.1 billion; FY 2012: -$123.8 billion; and FY 2002-2012: -$206.9 billion.)

Increase and Expansion of the Child Tax Credit. EGTTTRA increases the child tax credit from $500 to $1,000, phased-in over a ten-year period. EGTRRA makes the child credit refundable for up to 10 percent of a taxpayer's earned income in excess of $10,000 for calendar years 2001-2004. This percentage is increased to 15 percent for calendar years 2005 and thereafter. (JCT estimated revenue effect for FY 2011: -$6.0 billion; FY 2012: -$30.0 billion; and FY 2002-2012: -$36.0 billion.)

Estate and Gift Taxes Reduction and Estate Tax Repeal. EGTTTRA reduces estate, gift, and generation-skipping transfer taxes over ten years and repeal these taxes for estates of decedents dying and for gifts and generation-skipping transfers made after December 31, 2010. (JCT estimated revenue effect for FY 2003: -$1.2 billion; FY 2003-2007: -$9.2 billion; and FY 2003-2012: -$99.4 billion.)

Marriage Penalty Relief Provisions. EGTRRA increases the basic standard deduction for a married couple filing a joint return to twice the basic standard deduction for an unmarried individual filing a single return. This increase is phased-in over five years beginning in 2005 and would be fully phased-in for 2009 and thereafter. Also, EGTRRA increases the end point of the 15-percent regular income tax rate bracket for a married couple filing a joint return to twice the size of the corresponding rate bracket for an unmarried individual filing a single return. (JCT estimated revenue effect for FY 2011: -$5.7 billion; FY 2012: -$10.4 billion; and FY 2002-2012: -$16.1 billion.)

Retirement Savings and Pensions. EGTRRA makes numerous changes to pension and retirement savings laws. It modifies the individual retirement account (IRA) contribution limits by: (1) increasing the annual limit for IRA contributions from $2,000 to $3,000 in 2002, $4,000 in 2005, and $5,000 in 2008; and (2) allowing individuals who have attained age 50 before the end of the taxable year an additional "catch-up" contribution of $500 in years 2002 through 2005, and $1,000 in 2006 and thereafter. (JCT estimated revenue effect for FY 2011: -$2.5 billion; FY 2012: -$5.1 billion; and FY 2002-2012: -$7.6 billion.)

Education Incentives Provisions. EGTRRA permits taxpayers a deduction for qualified higher education expenses paid by the taxpayer during a taxable year. Also, EGTRRA increases the limit on annual contributions to Education (Ed) IRAs for a beneficiary from $500 to $2,000, and increases the income phase-out ranges for eligibility for the student loan interest deduction. (JCT estimated revenue effect for FY 2011: -$2.4 billion; FY 2012: -$3.2 billion; and FY 2002-2012: -$5.6 billion.)

Taxpayer Protection and IRS Accountability

Major provisions related to taxpayer protection and IRS accountability includes the following.

Application of Federal Tax Deposit Penalty. Under current law, a penalty is imposed on taxpayers who fail to make deposits of Federal taxes owed. A 10 percent penalty rate automatically applies if a deposit is not made in the manner required. The bill would provide that the 10 percent penalty rate would only apply in cases where the failure to deposit extends for more than 15 days. This provision of the bill would be effective on the date of enactment. (Joint Committee on Taxation (JCT) estimated revenue effect for FY 2002: loss of less than $500,000; FY 2003: -$5 million; FYs 2002-2007: -$27 million; FYs 2002-2012: -$54 million.)

Failure to Pay Estimated Tax. Under current law, a penalty is imposed if taxpayers failed to make quarterly deposits of estimated taxes. Taxpayers do not have to pay a penalty for failure to pay estimated tax when the amount of tax owed is less than $1,000. The bill would convert the penalty for failure to pay estimated tax into an interest provision. The bill would increase from $1,000 to $2,000 the amount of taxes owed before interest would be applied. This provision of the bill would be effective for estimated tax payments made for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2002.

(JCT estimated revenue effect for FY 2002: $0; FY 2003: $0; FYs 2002-2007: -$300 million; FYs 2002-2012: -$728 million.)

Interest on Overpayments of Income Tax by Individuals. Under current law, interest paid to taxpayers on overpayments of Federal income tax is included in gross income. The bill would exclude payment of overpayment interest from gross income. The exclusion from income of overpayment interest would not apply if the Secretary determines that the taxpayer's principal purpose for overpaying his or her tax is to take advantage of the exclusion. This provision of the bill would be effective for interest received in calendar years beginning after the date of enactment. (JCT estimated revenue effect for FY 2002: $0; FY 2003: $963 million; FYs 2002-2007: $559 million; FYs 2002-2012: -$22 million.)

Abatement of Interest. Current law allows the Treasury to abate interest in certain circumstances. The rule abating interest in the case of erroneous refunds does not apply if the amount of the erroneous refund exceeds $50,000. The bill would eliminate the $50,000 threshold for abatement of interest on erroneous refunds. The bill would require Treasury to abate interest on any erroneous refund, provided the taxpayer has not in any way caused the erroneous refund to occur. Also, the bill would require Treasury to abate interest on an underpayment where the underpayment is attributable to erroneous advice furnished to the taxpayer in writing by an officer or employee of the IRS acting in his or her official capacity. The changes made by these provisions would be effective with respect to interest accruing on or after the date of enactment. (JCT estimated revenue effect for FY 2002: -$0; FY 2003: less than $500,000; FYs 2002-2007: -$5 million; FYs 2002-2012: -$18 million.)

Cash Deposits. Under current law, interest on underpayments and overpayments continues to accrue during the period that a taxpayer and the IRS dispute a liability. The bill would allow a taxpayer to deposit cash with the IRS that the could subsequently be used to pay an underpayment of income, gift, estate, generation-skipping, or certain excise taxes. Under the bill, interest would not be charged on the portion of underpayment that is paid by the deposited amount for the period the amount is on deposit. This provision of the bill would apply to deposits made after the date of enactment. Amounts already on deposit as of the date of enactment would be treated as deposited on the date the taxpayer identifies the amount as a deposit made pursuant to this provision. (JCT estimated revenue effect for FY 2002: $19 million; FY 2003: $76 million; FYs 2002-2007: $130 million; FYs 2002-2012: $104 million.)

with a good history of tax compliance and the penalty for which would be disproportionate to the amount involved. This provision of the bill would be effective after December 31, 2002. (JCT estimated revenue effect for FY 2002: $0; FY 2003: -$15 million; FYs 2002-2007: -$78 million; FYs 2002-2012: -$168 million.)

Installment Agreements for Partial Payment. Under current law, the IRS can permit a taxpayer to pay taxes owed through installment payments; however, the installment agreement must provide for the full repayment of the amount owed. The bill would allow the IRS to enter into installment agreements that do not provide for the full repayment of the taxpayer's liability. This provision of the bill would be effective for installment agreements entered into on or after the date of enactment. (JCT estimated revenue effect for FY 2002: $11 million; FY 2003: $30 million; FYs 2002-2007: $61 million; FYs 2002-2012: $63 million.)

Extend Time Limit for Contesting IRS Levy. Current law authorizes the IRS to return property that has been wrongfully levied upon. In general, monetary proceeds may be returned within 9 months of the date of the levy. The bill would extend the period during which a taxpayer may contest an IRS levy from 9 months to 2 years. This provision of the bill would be effective on the date of enactment. (JCT estimated revenue effect for FY 2002: $0; FY 2003: -$1 million; FYs 2002-2007: -$11 million; FYs 2002-2012: -$29 million.)

Confirmation of Tax Court Authority to Apply Equitable Recoupment. Under current law, "equitable recoupment" generally allows a taxpayer to defeat a claim by demonstrating that he or she has an offsetting claim from the same transaction, even when that offsetting claim would normally be barred due to the statute of limitations. The bill would permit the U.S. Tax Court to apply the principle of "equitable recoupment" in the same manner that it is currently applied in Federal civil tax cases in the U.S. District Court or the U.S. Court of Claims. This provision of the bill would be effective for any action or proceeding in the Tax Court with respect to which a decision has not become final as of the date of enactment.

Collection Due Process Cases in the Tax Court. The bill would consolidate all judicial review of collection due process determinations in the United States Tax Court. Currently, these cases can be heard in tax courts or Federal courts. This provision of the bill would apply to judicial appeals filed after the date of enactment.

Office of Chief Counsel Review of Offers-in-Compromise. The bill would repeal the requirement that an offer-in-compromise of $50,000 or more must be supported by a written opinion from the Office of Chief Counsel. Under the bill, written opinions must only be provided if the Secretary determines that an opinion is required with respect to a compromise. This provision of the bill would apply to offers-in-compromise submitted or pending on or after the date of enactment.

Extend the Due Date for Electronically Filed Tax Returns. Under current law, individuals must file their income tax returns and pay the full amount owed by April 15. The bill would extend the due date for filing and paying individual income taxes to April 30 provided that the taxpayer files the return electronically and pays the entire balance due electronically by that date. The due date for filing by any other method, or for filing electronically but paying the balance due by non-electronic means, would not be changed. This provision of the bill would be effective for returns filed after December 31, 2002.

Requests for Disclosure of Collection Activities. Current law requires a former spouse to submit a written request in order to obtain information regarding collection activities relating to a joint return. The bill would eliminate the written request requirement from former spouse. This provision of the bill would apply to requests made after the date of enactment.

Disclosure of Non-Party Information in Tax Proceedings. The bill would require that information in the tax return of an individual who is not party to a proceeding be disclosed only when it directly relates to the resolution of the issue in dispute. Under the bill, the nonparty taxpayer would have to be notified (or a reasonable effort made to give notice) and the nonparty taxpayer could request that certain information in the return not be disclosed. This provision of the bill would apply to proceedings commenced after the date of enactment.

Compliance By Contractors with Confidentiality Safeguards. Current law permits the disclosure of returns and return information to State agencies, as well as to other Federal agencies for specified purposes. The bill would require that a State and Federal agencies conduct annual on-site reviews of all of their contractors receiving Federal returns and return information. The bill would require each State and Federal agency to submit a report of its findings to the IRS and certify annually that all contractors are in compliance with the requirements to safeguard the confidentiality of Federal returns and return information. This provision of the bill would be effective for disclosures made after December 31, 2002. The first certification would be required to be made with respect to calendar year 2003.

Higher Standards for Requests for and Consents to Disclosure. The bill would provide that a consent form authorizing the disclosure of an individual's tax return information to a third party must designate a recipient for the information and be dated at the time of execution in order to be valid. The bill would impose civil and criminal penalties for violators. The bill would require third parties receiving the information to ensure that the information will be kept confidential, used only for the purpose for which it was requested, and not further disclosed except to accomplish the purpose for which it was requested. Also, the bill would require the inspector general for tax administration to submit a report to Congress with 18 months of enactment on compliance with these requirements. This provision of the bill would apply to requests and consents made after 3 months after the date of enactment.

Unauthorized Browsing of Taxpayer Returns. The bill would require the IRS to notify a taxpayer that his or her return has been disclosed or inspected without authorization when the inspector general determines that such an unauthorized disclosure or inspection has taken place. (Under current law, this notification occurs only when the offender has been criminally charged.) Under the bill, the inspector general would also be required to include in its public annual report to the Joint Committee on Taxation information on all unauthorized disclosures or inspections. This provision of the bill would be effective upon date of enactment as it relates to notifying the taxpayer of determinations of an unlawful disclosure or inspection. The annual report requirement provision would be effective for calendar years ending after the date of enactment.

Pay-As-You-Go Scoring

According to BRD (Barth), the Tax Relief Guarantee Act would affect receipts and direct spending; therefore, it would be subject to the pay-as-you-go requirements of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990. The Treasury Department has not yet completed estimates of the revenue provisions of the Tax Relief Guarantee Act. The Joint Committee on Taxation's very preliminary estimates are that the revenue provisions of the Tax Relief Guarantee Act would have a net budget savings $30 million in FY 2002, and net budget costs of $102 million in FY 2003, $8.9 billion over six years from FYs 2002-2007, and $373.7 billion over eleven years from FYs 2002-2012.

Terrorism Insurance: Directors & Officers (D&O) Coverage - The New Reality

Following the September 11th attacks, several dominant insurers who underwrite Directors & Officers (D&O) insurance for large organizations are successfully applying a "failure to maintain adequate insurance" exclusion on D&O policies.

This exclusion should be particularly troubling to those directors & officers of leading organizations who either purchase inadequate terrorism insurance or refuse to purchase the insurance.

Specifically, directors & officers could be personally exposed to a shareholder action for diminution of share value due to the lack of adequate terrorism insurance.

The D&O exclusion for failure to maintain adequate insurance could affect corporate governance practices and may prompt directors and officers to examine the impact inadequate terrorism insurance coverage could have on their personal liability.

Attached is a copy of Moody's 1st quarter CMBS report. The highlights are as follows:

* We should be at the bottom of the cycle, but the recovery should be uneven. The consumer lead sectors (multi-family and retail) should spring back 1st while the corporate lead sectors (office and industrial) should lag

* We update some key terrorism insurance issues. At this point virtually all terrorism insurance policies have some major gap, including carve-outs for certain types of terrorism and 30 day cancellation clauses. While the availability and cost of policies have improved of late, investors and lenders still have less protection than they did prior to 9/11. However, we see the chances of a federal backstop as having improved.

REV_00143573

* Retail has had a mixed performance, with discounters (except Kmart) doing well and mall type tenants (department stores, apparel) doing poorly

* The hotel recovery is now well underway in most markets. As a result we will shortly published a revised approach to hotel liquidity reserves

* During the 1st quarter we launched a new quantitative tool, the MOST score, to forecast rating outlooks, and it will now be a regular feature in future quarterlies. The results show that upgrades should still exceed downgrades, but by a declining margin.

OVERVIEW: THE RECESSION THAT WASN'T?

CMBS was braced for a downturn that is turning out to be milder than expected. Given the long and powerful growth of the US economy over much of the last decade, including the excesses of the dot com era, most observers were questioning the potential depth and duration of a recession, not if one would occur. This downturn might not qualify for the formal designation of recession, but we may not be out of the woods yet. The recovery period may be rocky, prolonged, and bears some risk of backsliding.

Moody's new Red-Yellow-Green® cycle scoring system indicates that we should be about at the bottom of this real estate credit cycle. It is interesting to note that the US property sector as a whole should be back into the green band after only a one-year dip into yellow. During the last downturn the property market as a whole spent about a decade in the yellow band, and in 1986 it came perilously close to the red zone (see Figure 1).

Moody's expects the US property markets as a whole to bounce back to green, but each sector and location will recover at its own pace. Multi-family and retail are expected to bounce back well into the green band in the near term; office and industrial are expected to linger in the yellow band for several quarters longer.

This downturn was largely led by the corporate sector, which produced the challenges now faced by the office and industrial asset classes. Corporations have not yet resumed a level of investment that would stimulate the recovery and make it more sustainable. The office sector, in particular, may continue to take some time to work off the presently high level of vacancy. The multi-step process required for the corporate sector to increase demand for office and industrial is illustrated in Figure 2:

The consumer sector (which drives about two-thirds of all purchases of goods and services) had a more benign downturn. Several major economic indicators, such as consumer confidence, did not fall to the low levels seen in previous recessions. As a result the consumer driven sectors, retail and multi-family, are poised to bounce back more quickly.

Although the signs for recovery are positive, the economy and CMBS may still face near term challenges. There is still some risk of a double dip or a jobless recovery, in which profits stabilize but employers are slow to add workers. Also, a fragile recovery is more vulnerable to slipping back into downturn if another terrorist event or sovereign default were to occur. Lastly, given the lag between the performance of the economy and the performance of commercial real estate, delinquencies could persist even as the economy recovers.

IMPACT OF DOWNTURN ON DEAL PERFORMANCE AND ISSUANCE

We are seeing several notable effects of the downturn on CMBS deal performance and issuance.

There has been a celebration of sorts as to how well CMBS has performed during this downturn relative to other fixed income sectors. However, given the mildness of the test, high fives may be a little premature. CMBS are structured to withstand more stress than the recent downturn to be sure, and such tests may be yet to come.

With enhancement levels having already having been adjusted downward to reflect the lower likelihood of a repeat of the early 1990s scenario in which they were conceived, current transactions have more balanced levels of protection. They should not be expected to have as high an upgrade/downgrade ratio as has been recently experienced. Furthermore, as transactions become more concentrated by both number of loans and by type of assets (especially office and retail), delinquencies could remain low on average, but be more prone to spike up in given transactions.

Delinquencies still have room to rise slightly, but in general have been running at or below expectations. This is supported by several metrics from our new Enhanced Performance Reports (EPRs) as discussed below.

Some Bumps Ahead

CMBS issuance could be choppy over the next year, with loans on properties of some types (office) and in some markets (Northern California) having more trouble pencilling out to the borrowers' desired proceeds levels. Further constraining issuance is that multi-family remains highly competitive and that hotel has not yet come out of the penalty box (see figure 4).

Lastly, at this stage of the economic cycle, interest rates are more likely to rise than fall. However, lenders and borrowers in the CMBS industry do not suffer from a lack of creativity. We may see more floaters and loan structures like earn outs helping keep issuance moving along.

Moody's is spending much more time thinking about "bottom of cycle" issues than we have for years. In the recent past we were focused on rents which had spiked to levels above what we deemed to be sustainable, and we marked them down accordingly. However, we are now increasingly seeing cases where in-place rents are below sustainable. We are developing an approach to this issue to be published shortly.

TERRORISM INSURANCE - POLICY GAPS POSE RISKS TO INVESTORS

Although premiums for terrorism insurance have been coming down over the last month and availability has increased somewhat, there are still material gaps in protection that can pose risk to investors. However, there are a few positive signs coming from Washington that a federal backstop may be forthcoming that would help mitigate some of these issues.

At this point, many of the smaller (under $20 million) properties in CMBS transactions have some form of terrorism coverage. For larger properties the results for obtaining adequate terrorism coverage have been mixed.

However, virtually all terrorism insurance policies have some form of deficiency that leaves lenders and investors with less protection than they had prior to 9/11.

Carve Outs Are An Issue

One significant issue is that most policies still carve out risk from several types of terrorist acts, including those relating to the use of biological and chemical agents. Rather limited coverage for these may be available in some cases, but for yet another pricey premium. Such forms of terrorism are unlikely to physically destroy a building, but the clean-up costs, resulting loss of tenants and market stigma that could occur may have economic consequences that are nearly as severe.

Also, many terrorism policies are cancelable by the insurer on short notice. Therefore, if another major terrorist act were to occur anywhere on US soil, policies on many buildings would likely be yanked by insurers as they took time to reconsider risk metrics and pricing.

Terrorism insurance capacity may ultimately become an additional issue in some markets. As there are only a handful of insurers providing terrorism coverage, and as most have some limit of exposure in a given radius (say several miles), capacity could become constrained in some of the larger urban areas.

How Much Security Does A Blanket Provide?

We have noted that many borrowers are seeking coverage for terrorist acts via blanket policies, and we have observed that some blanket policies are more effective than others:

- First, blanket policies issued today (post 9/11) tend to be structured differently than in the recent past. In particular, the per occurrence language has been modified in many cases to limit the insurer's aggregate risk over a given time period.

- Second, Moody's has concerns in cases where coverage that appears adequate for a given building in a CMBS transaction may be at risk of being utilized by another property not in the CMBS transaction (especially if it is high profile) that is also covered under the same blanket.

Terrorism Insurance and Monitoring

Terrorism insurance remains one of the most challenging monitoring issues. We remind investors that the tranching ratings of single asset CMBS transactions depend almost entirely on the value of the collateral under various stress scenarios, not IF there is collateral. The terrorism policy gaps mentioned above provide cause for concern in this regard.

Absent a well-crafted federal backstop or the availability of significantly improved insurance policies, risks will have been transferred to lenders and bondholders that are not in keeping with the credit profile at the time of issuance. The fact that many insurance companies are no longer willing to accept terrorism risk, or if they will they seek carve-outs and cancellation clauses, sends a clear message in and of itself.

Servicers have begun to send Moody's numerous proposals where the original "all risk" insurance has lapsed and some alternative form of terrorism insurance is to be provided. Many of these situations are complex and require a case by case review process. For the immediate term we are amenable to less than perfect interim solutions.

However, we remain concerned that, absent an improved insurance market or federal backstop, bondholders may bear risk inconsistent with the long-term credit outlook reflected in ratings. Moody's will take this into account in a review of large loans during the later part of the second quarter barring positive developments from Washington as discussed below.

This Just in From Washington

During the week of April 8, 2002, members of Moody's CMBS group were invited to attend informational talks on the subject of terrorism insurance with officials from the White House and Congress and to present our already published opinions. We found that there is positive momentum to move forward a bill in the Senate (the House already has one) introducing a federal backstop for terrorism insurance. It appears likely at this time that the Senate bill will be introduced in the next few weeks, but the details remain sketchy. Major open issues to be dealt with include tort reform, whether or not the federal backstop should take the form of a loan, and how long a backstop would remain in effect.

RETAIL - DISCOUNTERS (WITH ONE BIG EXCEPTION) UP AND MALL TENANTS DOWN

For retail, March 2002 same store sales were up about 5.5% versus one year ago. However, as shown in Figure 3, there is a significant bifurcation of performance by type of tenant. Most noteworthy: the type of tenants found in malls (apparel, department stores) have suffered declines, while the type of tenants found in community and power centers--discounters (with the notable exception of Kmart) and off price retailers--have shown healthy increases.

Closing the Gap(s)

The Gap, a mall mainstay, continues to struggle and has had 23 consecutive monthly same store sales declines. Moody's downgraded the Gap during the first quarter from Baa3 (low investment grade) to Ba2 (speculative grade). In light of this performance, it is not surprising that they have announced store closings. It is expected that they will focus on stores with expiring leases to avoid lease termination expenses and will be paying close attention to occupancy cost. Occupancy cost has long been a key driver of Moody's analysis of whether mall tenants are paying sustainable rents, and our approach to occupancy cost will be included in a forthcoming article.

For department stores, only one chain (Neiman Marcus) posted a gain in 2001, and that was a slender 1%. As a result, consolidation among department stores is likely as they compete to lower costs and more effectively compete with discounters. One such example is the proposed merger of Federated and May.

Discounters Hold Their Own

For February 2002 several discounters posted strong results, with Wal-Mart up 10.3% in same store sales and Target up 8.5% versus the same period of last year. Of course some of this gain came at the expense of Kmart, which filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection and announced the closing of 284 stores. The closed stores cover 271 Kmart's and 12 superstores in 40 states and represent 13% of the chain's 2,114 stores.

HOTEL - RECOVERY UNDERWAY IN MANY MARKETS

Some positive signs have begun to emerge for hotels, the hardest hit CMBS sector following September 11. Many of the top 25 markets are now within 10% of where their RevPAR was one year ago. As a result, we will be shortly revisiting our interim liquidity and tranching approaches.

For the week of 9/16/01, the first full week following the events of 9/11 and the initial travel disruptions, RevPAR in the US as a whole was down by 37%. For the week of 9/16/01 only one market (Houston) out of the top 25 had a decline in RevPAR of less than 25%.

However, during the past four weeks most of the top 25 markets have been running 5%-10% lower RevPAR than a year ago. Only three markets are still down 25% or more versus the same period one year ago (Boston, Oahu, and San Francisco) as compared with 24 of the top 25 six months ago. Four markets have even turned positive (Houston, Atlanta, Norfolk and Nashville).

With RevPAR expected to be flat to slightly lower for the rest of the year, it should return to about the levels of 1998 or 1999. As Moody's viewed 2000 levels generally as being unsustainable, the net result of the last six months may be a correction back to more balanced fundamentals. As 1998-1999 RevPAR was utilized in our analysis of hotel transactions over the past few years, the return to these levels has resulted in relatively few downgrades.

Full Service Suffers

The pace of the recovery in hotels is not uniform and varies based on price point, location, and demand profile. In particular, full service hotels located in prominent gateway cities have suffered disproportionately due to their reliance on the weakened corporate and convention sectors. For the last four weeks the average year over year RevPAR decline for the upper upscale segment was 15%, while limited service was down by 5%.

Hotel delinquencies in CMBS, which had been rising slowly for the past few years, showed a sharp spike in the fourth quarter of 2001, as expected, due to the sudden drop in travel post 9/11. It is interesting to note the bifurcation of delinquency results reported by the ACLI and the CMBS industry via the Trepp database (see Figure 4).

Both reported about 1% delinquency from 1Q 1999 through 3Q 1999. At that point, however, the reported ACLI delinquencies fell to negligible levels through 3Q 2001 while CMBS delinquencies continued to rise to 2%. Both spiked in the 4th quarter of 2001 due to 9/11, but the ACLI levels returned only to the previous 1% while CMBS hotel delinquencies shot up to about 5%.

We believe that the hotel delinquency rates shown in the CMBS database, which are subject to public scrutiny, will ultimately prove to be the more reliable indicators of credit performance and are more reflective of the current distress in the hotel market.

CONDUIT LTVS STABLE, BUT DIVERSITY SLIPS

Moody's rated five conduit transactions during the first quarter that fit the profile of those included in our ongoing study of conduit leverage and diversity.

For loan level diversity, the Herfindahl score for first quarter transactions was 58, tied for the lowest level since 1997 (see Figure 5). The Herfindahl scores for the five Moody's rated conduits fell in a band of 51 to 66.

Figure 5
U.S. Conduit Loan Diversity Trends

Conduit LTVs on average have been holding steady in the high 80s on a Moody's basis for the past two years, and averaged 88.6% during the most recent quarter (see Figure 6). The LTVs for all five first quarter conduits were tightly clustered between 87.9% and 89.2%. "Offenders"-- those loans with greater than 100% Moody's LTV--declined to 2% from 4% the period before. The offenders in the five conduits ranged between 0% and 4.6% of pool balance.

EPRs SIGNAL MORE BALANCED OUTLOOK FOR NEAR TERM RATING ACTIONS

During the first quarter Moody's introduced Enhanced Performance Reports (EPRs), a new CMBS monitoring system. In addition to providing a high level of reporting on bond and loan performance, EPRs include MOST™ scores, an analytical tool designed to provide a quantitative measure of CMBS credit risk.

Moody's initially posted EPRs for 80 transactions to its web site and has subsequently added another 40. The balance of monitored transactions are expected to be available by the end of the second quarter.

Adding MOST™ Score Data to Outlooks

One benefit of the new EPR's and Most™ scores is that they provide additional inputs for forecasting monitoring trends. As a result, future quarterly reports will feature EPR based outlooks.

EPRs incorporate Moody's Red-Yellow-Green® property market score in a variety of ways, including calculating the portion of collateral located in markets with the scores in the lower band of the red designation. Fortunately, CMBS has fairly limited exposure to such markets. 80% of the transactions for which EPRs have been prepared to date had 15% or less exposure to the lower end of red markets. 18% of transactions had NO exposure to lower red markets.

CMBS Tracking Performance Expectations

The majority of CMBS conduit transactions are performing at or slightly above expectations as evidenced by their current Most™ scores. 53% of the conduit transactions for which EPRs are available to date had Most™ scores between 45 and 55, the center of the 100 point scale, while 8% had scores lower than 45 and 39% had scores higher than 55. The trend of upgrades outweighing downgrades thus appears likely to continue, but the ratio of upgrades to downgrades seems likely to decline.

The sub-components of the Most™ score provide additional color on this trend. The score for adjusted credit support (credit support increased by payoffs and defeasance and decreased for unrealized losses) showed 62% of deals had scores between 45 and 55 with 34% above and 4% below. The delinquency history score, which measures the timing of losses in relation to expectations, shows 49% of transactions in the 45-55 band with 26 % above and 25% below.

There were relatively few fixed rate transactions with total Most™ scores above 75 or below 25, the levels that most clearly indicate the potential for upgrade or downgrade. Therefore, fewer rating changes should be expected over the near term, and those that do occur are less likely to involve multiple notches. Please note that after Moody's takes a rating action, whether upgrade or downgrade, the Most™ score for that transaction will be recalibrated back to 50. Future trends will thus be benchmarked from the rating a transaction currently holds as opposed to its original one.

We will continue to refine Most™ scores over time to make them as predictive as possible. Investor comments on the Most™ score, or other features they would like to see added to our suite of cmbs credit tools, are invited.

SURVEILLANCE - UPGRADES PREVAIL EX K MART

During the 1st quarter Moody's took rating actions on 26 cmbs transactions with a total of 80 tranches. In all there were 20 downgrades, 21 upgrades and 39 affirmations. 14 of the 20 downgrades were related to the downgrade of Kmart's corporate debt, including several transactions that had their ratings moved more than once. As the Kmart ratings moved deeper into below investment grade the role of the collateral in the ratings of their CTL based transactions became increasingly important. In some cases the collateral was of poor quality and was dark even before Kmart declared bankruptcy, and those ratings tended to closely follow the corporate ones given a lack of superior recovery characteristics.

Several other Kmart backed CTL transactions involved properties on the initial closure list, and properties securing the balance of the CTL's maintain ongoing operations. Although Kmart's corporate credit is now Ca, several CTL transactions retain ratings a few notches higher reflecting their superior recovery profile.

The non-Kmart-related downgrades were attributable to a variety of causes. One was attributable to a corporate downgrade (Nortel), one to rising delinquency in a conduit (MLMI 1995-C2), and a third to concentration in the beleaguered hotel sector (with the largest properties in some of the slowest markets to recover).

The affirmations had a variety of drivers as well, including of course the affirmation of Aaa tranches in deals where the subordinate tranches were upgraded. Of particular note were the many all hotel transactions that DID NOT get downgraded. In most of these cases the hotels had floating rate loans, and actual debt service dropped enough due to the low interest rate environment to offset RevPAR declines. This helped the hotels buy time until the recovery was more firmly underway.

SAVE THE DATE

Moody's will be hosting its 4th annual CMBS conference on October 25, 2002, at the Roosevelt Hotel in Manhattan. There will be presentations on credit and market trends from 3 to 5, followed by a cocktail reception. We look forward to seeing you there.

Terrorism Insurance: Directors & Officers (D&O) Coverage - The New Reality

Following the September 11th attacks, several dominant insurers who underwrite Directors & Officers (D&O) insurance for large organizations are successfully applying a "failure to maintain adequate insurance" exclusion on D&O policies.

This exclusion should be particularly troubling to those directors & officers of leading organizations who either purchase inadequate terrorism insurance or refuse to purchase the insurance.

Specifically, directors & officers could be personally exposed to a shareholder action for diminution of share value due to the lack of adequate terrorism insurance.

The D&O exclusion for failure to maintain adequate insurance could affect corporate governance practices and may prompt directors and officers to examine the impact inadequate terrorism insurance coverage could have on their personal liability.

Report released by the Bond Market Association today. Finds that large lenders have placed on hold or canceled more than $7 billion -- or 10% of the 2001 large loan volume -- in commercial mortgage loans because of difficulties in finding terrorism risk insurance. Strongly urges immediate congressional action on backstop program.

Lack of Terrorism Insurance Hurts the CMBS Market

A recent survey by The Bond Market Association found that large lenders have placed on hold or canceled more than $7 billion—or 10 percent of the 2001 large loan volume—in commercial mortgage loans, citing the difficulty and expense for property owners trying to find terrorism insurance coverage.¹ These cancelled or delayed loans represent lost construction jobs and missed cost savings for property owners hoping to refinance at lower interest rates.

Most large commercial loans are repackaged as bonds known as commercial mortgage-backed securities, or CMBS. Similar to residential mortgage-backed securities, the principal and interest payments for CMBS flow from mortgage payments. The difference is that CMBS are backed solely by mortgages on commercial buildings. Investors in this $270 billion market include pension funds, insurance companies and other institutions. In 2001, the volume of large loans totaled $73.8 billion, $72 billion of which became CMBS. The $7 billion in loans on hold or cancelled so far this year likely means $7 billion less in CMBS will be issued in 2002. As the Association completed its survey in March, the actual number of incomplete deals—and lost CMBS issuance—could be even higher.

As with any mortgage, lenders require the owner of the property, which is the loan collateral, to obtain insurance coverage. Prior to the terrorist attacks on New York and Washington last September 11, such policies routinely included coverage for losses related to acts of terrorism. In the wake of the destruction of the World Trade Center towers and the damage to the surrounding area in lower Manhattan, most insurers of commercial property are either refusing to provide the same coverage, or else pricing the coverage high enough to render the real estate deal uneconomic.

Terrorism coverage for many large properties has been difficult to find, according to a General Accounting Office report issued in February. While property owners continue to make mortgage payments that flow through to CMBS investors, the lack of terrorism coverage can place the property owner in technical default on their loans. This could lead rating agencies that monitor the pools of mortgages underlying CMBS to downgrade the credit quality of the securities. Institutional investors such as life insurance companies could see their regulatory capital erode if they have large CMBS holdings.

¹ The Bond Market Association surveyed leading CMBS underwriters and received responses from CMBS underwriters that accounted for nearly 75 percent of CMBS issuance in 2001.

It is imperative that Congress appreciate the potential fallout from the financing problems facing the commercial real estate industry. In October of last year, the House and Senate each developed separate proposals to deal with the problem. Both would have made the federal government—either through loan guarantees or direct payments—a reinsurer of last resort for insurance companies faced with overwhelming terrorism-related claims. Efforts to reach a compromise on the legislation last fall ultimately failed. It is critical Congress act to shore up the terrorism insurance market immediately.

Lack of Terrorism Insurance Hurts the CMBS Market

A recent survey by The Bond Market Association found that large lenders have placed on hold or canceled more than $7 billion—or 10 percent of the 2001 large loan volume—in commercial mortgage loans, citing the difficulty and expense for property owners trying to find terrorism insurance coverage.¹ These cancelled or delayed loans represent lost construction jobs and missed cost savings for property owners hoping to refinance at lower interest rates.

Most large commercial loans are repackaged as bonds known as commercial mortgage-backed securities, or CMBS. Similar to residential mortgage-backed securities, the principal and interest payments for CMBS flow from mortgage payments. The difference is that CMBS are backed solely by mortgages on commercial buildings. Investors in this $270 billion market include pension funds, insurance companies and other institutions. In 2001, the volume of large loans totaled $73.8 billion, $72 billion of which became CMBS. The $7 billion in loans on hold or cancelled so far this year likely means $7 billion less in CMBS will be issued in 2002. As the Association completed its survey in March, the actual number of incomplete deals—and lost CMBS issuance—could be even higher.

As with any mortgage, lenders require the owner of the property, which is the loan collateral, to obtain insurance coverage. Prior to the terrorist attacks on New York and Washington last September 11, such policies routinely included coverage for losses related to acts of terrorism. In the wake of the destruction of the World Trade Center towers and the damage to the surrounding area in lower Manhattan, most insurers of commercial property are either refusing to provide the same coverage, or else pricing the coverage high enough to render the real estate deal uneconomic.

Terrorism coverage for many large properties has been difficult to find, according to a General Accounting Office report issued in February. While property owners continue to make mortgage payments that flow through to CMBS investors, the lack of terrorism coverage can place the property owner in technical default on their loans. This could lead rating agencies that monitor the pools of mortgages underlying CMBS to downgrade the credit quality of the securities. Institutional investors such as life insurance companies could see their regulatory capital erode if they have large CMBS holdings.

¹ The Bond Market Association surveyed leading CMBS underwriters and received responses from CMBS underwriters that accounted for nearly 75 percent of CMBS issuance in 2001.

It is imperative that Congress appreciate the potential fallout from the financing problems facing the commercial real estate industry. In October of last year, the House and Senate each developed separate proposals to deal with the problem. Both would have made the federal government—either through loan guarantees or direct payments—a reinsurer of last resort for insurance companies faced with overwhelming terrorism-related claims. Efforts to reach a compromise on the legislation last fall ultimately failed. It is critical Congress act to shore up the terrorism insurance market immediately.

Report released by the Bond Market Association today. Finds that large lenders have placed on hold or canceled more than $7 billion -- or 10% of the 2001 large loan volume -- in commercial mortgage loans because of difficulties in finding terrorism risk insurance. Strongly urges immediate congressional action on backstop program.

FINANCE

Terrorism Insurance Facing Senate Hurdle

Senate leaders in the midst of crafting a unanimous consent agreement on terrorism reinsurance

legislation are weighing requests from more than one Democratic senator wanting to offer substitute legislation, sources on and off Capitol Hill said Thursday.

Chief among those Democrats is Commerce Chairman Hollings.

According to sources, Hollings

is in the process of revamping a comprehensive reinsurance measure he introduced last November.

He hopes to offer it as an amendment to the pending bill.

Hollings, who has expressed concern that the final Senate package not constitute a "bailout" of the insurance industry, is "standing firm" in his desire to offer his amendment, said one source familiar with the senator's efforts. Hollings' office did not respond to requests for more information.

According to sources, Sen. Bill Nelson, D-Fla., a former state insurance commissioner and a member of the Commerce Committee, also is working on a substitute in the form of an amendment. So may be Sen. Barbara Boxer, D-Calif., said sources. Boxer, also a Commerce Committee member, was a chief cosponsor of Hollings' bill in November. Spokesmen for Nelson and Boxer did not respond to requests for comment. As of Thursday, it remained unclear what bill Senate leaders intended to use as the floor vehicle. Senate Minority Whip Nickles sought last week to bring up a House-passed bill for amendment. But central figures from both parties seem to agree on a compromise version written as the base bill late last year by Senate Majority Leader Daschle and members of the Senate Banking Committee. Senate and industry supporters of passing legislation had expressed an interest in completing floor action on the reinsurance legislation by late April. However, that timetable would appear somewhat optimistic at this point, sources said this week. Although he did not mention he was drafting a bill, Nelson earlier this month characterized reinsurance legislation coming before the Senate as having "a gross omission ... and that is, the consumer needs to be protected from the rates being jacked up so high using terrorism as an excuse," he said. Hollings' November bill would have created an insurer-funded national pool to pay for the first $50 billion in losses, and then would provide government assistance for losses up to $100 billion. No tort provisions were in that version. However, sources said they expect Hollings is updating his legislation based on new information gleaned since late last year. Although his office would not confirm it, sources also said Hollings might be considering raising the deductible and possibly offering some "very limited" tort reform. Hollings again may seek cooperation from Commerce ranking member John McCain, R-Ariz., who introduced his own terrorism insurance bill last year. However, sources said the two legislators do not currently appear to be working together on the reinsurance issue. In another development, the Bond Market Association released a survey Thursday that it said shows large lenders have placed on hold or canceled more than $7 billion in commercial mortgage loans, because of "the difficulty and expense" for property owners trying to find terrorism insurance coverage. FINANCE

Terrorism Insurance Facing Senate Hurdle

Senate leaders in the midst of crafting a unanimous consent agreement on terrorism reinsurance

legislation are weighing requests from more than one Democratic senator wanting to offer substitute

legislation, sources on and off Capitol Hill said Thursday.

Chief among those Democrats is Commerce Chairman Hollings.

According to sources, Hollings

is in the process of revamping a comprehensive reinsurance measure he introduced last November.

He hopes to offer it as an amendment to the pending bill.

Hollings, who has expressed concern that the final Senate package not constitute a "bailout" of the insurance industry, is "standing firm" in his desire to offer his amendment, said one source familiar with the senator's efforts. Hollings' office did not respond to requests for more information.

According to sources, Sen. Bill Nelson, D-Fla., a former state insurance commissioner and a member of the Commerce Committee, also is working on a substitute in the form of an amendment. So may be Sen. Barbara Boxer, D-Calif., said sources. Boxer, also a Commerce Committee member, was a chief cosponsor of Hollings' bill in November. Spokesmen for Nelson and Boxer did not respond to requests for comment. As of Thursday, it remained unclear what bill Senate leaders intended to use as the floor vehicle. Senate Minority Whip Nickles sought last week to bring up a House-passed bill for amendment. But central figures from both parties seem to agree on a compromise version written as the base bill late last year by Senate Majority Leader Daschle and members of the Senate Banking Committee. Senate and industry supporters of passing legislation had expressed an interest in completing floor action on the reinsurance legislation by late April. However, that timetable would appear somewhat optimistic at this point, sources said this week. Although he did not mention he was drafting a bill, Nelson earlier this month characterized reinsurance legislation coming before the Senate as having "a gross omission ... and that is, the consumer needs to be protected from the rates being jacked up so high using terrorism as an excuse," he said. Hollings' November bill would have created an insurer-funded national pool to pay for the first $50 billion in losses, and then would provide government assistance for losses up to $100 billion. No tort provisions were in that version. However, sources said they expect Hollings is updating his legislation based on new information gleaned since late last year. Although his office would not confirm it, sources also said Hollings might be considering raising the deductible and possibly offering some "very limited" tort reform. Hollings again may seek cooperation from Commerce ranking member John McCain, R-Ariz., who introduced his own terrorism insurance bill last year. However, sources said the two legislators do not currently appear to be working together on the reinsurance issue. In another development, the Bond Market Association released a survey Thursday that it said shows large lenders have placed on hold or canceled more than $7 billion in commercial mortgage loans, because of "the difficulty and expense" for property owners trying to find terrorism insurance coverage. 2d Session

H. R. 3838

To amend the charter of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States organization to make members of the armed forces who receive special pay for duty subject to hostile fire or imminent danger eligible for membership in the organization, and for other purposes.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

March 4, 2002

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey (for himself and Mr. EVANS) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary

A BILL

To amend the charter of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States organization to make members of the armed forces who receive special pay for duty subject to hostile fire or imminent danger eligible for membership in the organization, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. AMENDMENTS TO VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS OF THE UNITED STATES CHARTER.

(a) ELIGIBILITY FOR MEMBERSHIP OF INDIVIDUALS RECEIVING SPECIAL PAY FOR DUTY SUBJECT TO HOSTILE FIRE OR IMMINENT DANGER- Section 230103 of title 36, United States Code, is amended--

(1) by striking 'or' at the end of paragraph (1);

(2) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (2) and inserting '; or'; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

'(3) in an area which entitled the individual to receive special pay for duty subject to hostile fire or imminent danger under section 310 of title 37.'

(b) CLARIFICATION OF PURPOSES OF THE CORPORATION- Section 230102 of such title is amended in the matter preceding paragraph (1) by inserting 'charitable,' before 'and educational,'.

NEW YORK, April 19, 2002 - American International Group, Inc. (AIG) Chairman M. R. Greenberg has issued the following statement regarding statements attributed to an executive with AIG's new Lloyd's syndicate:

"Recent statements attributed to an executive with Ascot Underwriting, Ltd. suggest that a U.S. Government-led solution to the severe shortage of terrorism insurance is no longer necessary.

"While AIG and a number of other insurers have created a limited market for terrorism insurance in the wake of September 11, there is still an urgent need for the Federal Government to create a reinsurance backstop facility to provide the capacity to cover all businesses that could suffer terror losses. There is simply not enough capacity in the private market to address what is still an infinite risk. AIG believes that the Congress should act quickly to pass terrorism insurance legislation, which is necessary for economic growth and job creation.

"Ascot Underwriting Ltd. serves as the managing agent for AIG's Lloyd's syndicate, and Ascot Underwriting Ltd. employees are not authorized to speak for AIG."

SUPREME COURT: Negative action
EDITORIAL
Jacksonville (FL) Times Union

Despite weak denials by the U.S. Senate's leadership, it's clear that Miguel Estrada is a victim of racial bias.

Estrada is an American success story. He came to this country as a teenager, speaking virtually no English, and ended up arguing cases before the Supreme Court for both Republican and Democratic administrations.

When he was nominated for a spot on the D.C. Court of Appeals, it was widely assumed that was a steppingstone toward appointing him to the Supreme Court when a vacancy develops. That would make Estrada, considered one of the nation's most brilliant legal minds, the first Hispanic ever to serve on the high court.

REV_00143682

The Senate's Democratic leadership, however, has his nomination bottled up in committee. Pressed to act, one senator growled that he wouldn't be stampeded into voting on anyone. But Estrada was nominated a year ago. Since then, 42 others have been confirmed -- yet Estrada still hasn't been given the courtesy of a hearing.

Democrats say they oppose Estrada because he favors interpreting the Constitution to mean only what it says. They prefer someone who will interpret it as necessary to arrive at the rulings they prefer.

But the Constitution has no meaning at all, and thus offers no protections to anyone, if it is subject to change at the whim of lifetime appointees. Estrada merely wants to uphold constitutional, representative democracy -- hardly a legitimate reason to exclude him from the federal bench.

As the Democrats have often argued, there should be no philosophical litmus test for a federal judge. Approval should be based purely on judicial temperament and expertise. The American Bar Association has rated Estrada well qualified, and the Democrats themselves called the ABA ratings the "gold standard."

Even Al Gore's lawyer publicly endorsed Estrada.

There are four vacancies on the D.C. Court of Appeals, yet the Senate continues to stall.

Democrats don't oppose the idea of a Hispanic judge, of course. They just don't want one who is both competent and conservative, particularly if he might one day become the first Hispanic on the high court. They prefer to avoid the message that would send, no matter how much inconvenience it may cause to litigants awaiting justice.

I recommend the following as the Statement of Administration Policy:

"The Administration supports House passage of H.R. 4231, which will assist in ensuring that Federal agencies properly take account of the needs of small businesses in the regulatory process.

"The Administration will continue to work in the legislative process to ensure that subsections 4(8) and 5(b) of the bill are amended to be consistent with the Constitution's commitment to the President of authority to supervise the unitary executive branch and to recommend to Congress such measures as he judges necessary and expedient. The Administration also notes that, because the Deputy Chief Counsels of the Office of Advocacy will be appointed by the Chief Counsel rather than the President or the head of a department, they are not officers and therefore cannot, consistent with the Constitution's Appointment Clause, exercise significant authority pursuant to the laws of the United States. Accordingly, the Chief Counsel will not be able to assign to the Deputy Counsels the duty of exercising the Chief Counsel's authority to waive the requirements of certain statutes (5 U.S.C. 609(e)) and to appear as of right as amicus curiae in any court of the United States reviewing a rule (5 U.S.C. 612(b))."

As of today, President has nominated 99 (it is 99 after Gardner's nomination today for ED PA). The Senate has confirmed 45 judges (most recent confirmation was Legrome Davis last Thursday). There are 54 remaining nominees for approximately 95 vacancies. Therefore, there are about 40 vacancies for which President has not yet submitted formal nominations.

Adam, Brett;

The search printing has not yet completed ! The printing started on Thursday evening and continued through the weekend. There are currently 52 boxes of paper printing and probably another 30 to go.

Do you want me to continue printing ? Please note that this is the prining without the bulk mail.

I am reviewing my original estimate to see why it was so far off.

Later... Tony

FYI that Matt Smith has 450 reserved for Natl. Religious Broadcasters event until 11am on Friday, May 3rd.

Kara indicated that the Law Day event will probably need to be in 450 and will likely be scheduled for 10:30 am. I brought this to Matt's attention this morning and he said we'll need to talk about since the President will likely drop by his NRB event. Wanted to give you a heads up on this location timing conflict.

Because of the Judge's schedule the 10:30 am start time for Law Day event in 450 is greatly desired. He has a Montgomery Co. Law Day speech in Gaithersburg (45 minutes each way) that is occurring between two events with the President that day so his schedule is already really tight. Obviously we'll do whatever works best for the President.

On the May 3 scheduling request: I think the invited guests should not include law clerks, who work for the judiciary and should not be part of this kind of event. I also do not think law students add much. Rather, I think we should invite (i) selected bar leaders from around the country; (ii) leaders of certain groups that care about this issue; and (iii) bipartisan supporters of the key nominees.

I need the latest info on Law Day plans. I've been working on the Proclamation with DOJ but there is apparently confusion over scheduling and what, if anything, we want DOJ or the AG to do. May 1 is Law Day by statute, so if POTUS does an event May 3, it can't technically be a Law Day event. Please fill me in on where things are with this. There are a couple folks in OLP who really need guidance.

What I know:

He's doing an event/speech on May 3 in Room 450 that will be a Law Day event. (For what it is worth, the Montgomery County Law Day event is May 3, so we have some cover. I am sure there are others that do not occur on May 1 itself.) And to reference Law Day, he can just begin by noting that "This week, we have celebrated ____." But the speech will largely be about judges, as I understand it. John McConnell et al are apparently in charge of the drafting, as I understand it.

Also, he is having Senate Judiciary Committee Republicans to White House on May 9. There will be open press at top and he will make remarks on the 1-year anniversary.

According to our records, we have not received a signed certification from you on the form that is attached to this e-mail. The form relates to the Department of Justice's criminal investigation of the unauthorized disclosure last year of confidential government information concerning the blocking and freezing of the assets of the Global Relief Foundation, the Benevolence International Foundation, and the Holy Land Foundation. Please complete and sign the attached form and return it to Brent Greenfield in Room 160 1/2 no later than close of business Wednesday, April 24. If you have any questions or cannot complete the form in that time frame, please contact me at 6-7984.

As part of the certification, you are also asked to produce all official documents in your possession (including any e-mails and internal memoranda you have retained) that:

a) were created (or are dated) between September 11, 2001 and on or before September 30, 2001, and indicate that the Global Relief Foundation and/or the Benevolence International Foundation was being considered for inclusion on a list of organizations whose assets would be frozen by the United States government; or

b) were created (or are dated) on or before December 4, 2001, and indicate that the Holy Land Foundation was being considered for inclusion on a list of suspected terrorist fund-raising organizations or would otherwise have its assets blocked or frozen by the United States government; or

c) were created (or are dated) on or before December 14, 2001, and indicate that the Global Relief Foundation was to be searched or would have its assets frozen or blocked on or about December 14, 2001 or which discusses the expected date and time of any such action.

CERTIFICATION

I certify, to the best of my knowledge, that

_____ I had access

_____ I did not have access

- a) on or before September 30, 2001, to the information that the Global Relief Foundation and/or the Benevolence International Foundation was being considered for inclusion on a list of organizations whose assets would be frozen; or
- b) on or before December 3, 2001, to the information that a search would be conducted of (or that a blocking action would be taken against) the Holy Land Foundation on December 4, 2001; or
- c) on or before December 13, 2001, to the information that a blocking action would be taken against (or that a search would be conducted of) the Global Relief Foundation on December 14, 2001.

I further certify, to the best of my knowledge, that

_____ I have produced to the Office of the Counsel to the President all official documents in my possession (including any e-mails and internal memoranda I have) responsive to the document production directive in the e-mail memorandum to which this Certification was attached.

_____ I have conducted a search and determined that I have no such documents.

I understand that the information and documents I provide to the Office of the Counsel to the President are likely to be disclosed to the U.S. Department of Justice for use in its criminal investigation and that the Counsel's Office is not acting as my private attorney in this matter.

I further understand that this Certification is for purposes of a federal criminal investigation and that intentional false statements may result in criminal penalties or other sanctions.

According to our records, we have not received a signed certification from you on the form that is attached to this e-mail. The form relates to the Department of Justice's criminal investigation of the unauthorized disclosure last year of confidential government information concerning the blocking and freezing of the assets of the Global Relief Foundation, the Benevolence International Foundation, and the Holy Land Foundation. Please complete and sign the attached form and return it to Brent Greenfield in Room 160 1/2 no later than close of business Wednesday, April 24. If you have any questions or cannot complete the form in that time frame, please contact me at 6-7984.

As part of the certification, you are also asked to produce all official documents in your possession (including any e-mails and internal memoranda you have retained) that:

a) were created (or are dated) between September 11, 2001 and on or before September 30, 2001, and indicate that the Global Relief Foundation and/or the Benevolence International Foundation was being considered for inclusion on a list of organizations whose assets would be frozen by the United States government; or

b) were created (or are dated) on or before December 4, 2001, and indicate that the Holy Land Foundation was being considered for inclusion on a list of suspected terrorist fund-raising organizations or would otherwise have its assets blocked or frozen by the United States government; or

c) were created (or are dated) on or before December 14, 2001, and indicate that the Global Relief Foundation was to be searched or would have its assets frozen or blocked on or about December 14, 2001 or which discusses the expected date and time of any such action.

CERTIFICATION

I certify, to the best of my knowledge, that

_____ I had access

_____ I did not have access

- a) on or before September 30, 2001, to the information that the Global Relief Foundation and/or the Benevolence International Foundation was being considered for inclusion on a list of organizations whose assets would be frozen; or
- b) on or before December 3, 2001, to the information that a search would be conducted of (or that a blocking action would be taken against) the Holy Land Foundation on December 4, 2001; or
- c) on or before December 13, 2001, to the information that a blocking action would be taken against (or that a search would be conducted of) the Global Relief Foundation on December 14, 2001.

I further certify, to the best of my knowledge, that

_____ I have produced to the Office of the Counsel to the President all official documents in my possession (including any e-mails and internal memoranda I have) responsive to the document production directive in the e-mail memorandum to which this Certification was attached.

_____ I have conducted a search and determined that I have no such documents.

I understand that the information and documents I provide to the Office of the Counsel to the President are likely to be disclosed to the U.S. Department of Justice for use in its criminal investigation and that the Counsel's Office is not acting as my private attorney in this matter.

I further understand that this Certification is for purposes of a federal criminal investigation and that intentional false statements may result in criminal penalties or other sanctions.

Karen Hughes resigning as White House counselor

WASHINGTON (AP) * White House counselor Karen Hughes said Tuesday she's resigning from the White House to return to Texas, but will continue advising President Bush from afar.

Hughes has worked for Bush since his days as Texas governor and is one of his closest confidants.

"Later this summer, I'm going to be changing the way in which I serve the president. My husband and I have made a difficult but we think right decision to move our family home back to Texas," Hughes said in a surprise announcement in the White House briefing room

REV_00143781

"Our roots are there," she said. "I guess we're a little homesick."

Hughes and political aide Karl Rove were critical to Bush's rise from a two-term Texas governor to the presidency.

Hughes said she plans to advise the White House from Texas on big-picture communication strategies, but will likely leave the federal payroll in the summer.

She made the decision now, Hughes said, because of a May 1 deadline to decide whether her son, Robert, would remain in Washington schools. She has a daughter in Austin. Her son traveled with Hughes aboard the campaign plane.

She said Bush was not surprised by the move. "He accepted my decision and respected it," she said.

"The is a family friendly White House," she said. "And this is a family-friendly decision."

Adam;

It is very difficult to give an estimate that has any accuracy to it because the quantity of print depends on the formatting of each record and that is impossible to predict.

We currently have 95 boxes of paper in the EOPDC and the printing is probably 75% complete.

The printing is currently stopped because the printer is down for repairs.

What I know:

He's doing an event/speech on May 3 in Room 450 that will be a Law Day event. (For what it is worth, the Montgomery County Law Day event is May 3, so we have some cover. I am sure there are others that do not occur on May 1 itself.) And to reference Law Day, he can just begin by noting that "This week, we have celebrated ____." But the speech will largely be about judges, as I understand it. John McConnell et al are apparently in charge of the drafting, as I understand it.

Also, he is having Senate Judiciary Committee Republicans to White House on May 9. There will be open press at top and he will make remarks on the 1-year anniversary.

I need the latest info on Law Day plans. I've been working on the Proclamation with DOJ but there is apparently confusion over scheduling and what, if anything, we want DOJ or the AG to do. May 1 is Law Day by statute, so if POTUS does an event May 3, it can't technically be a Law Day event. Please fill me in on where things are with this. There are a couple folks in OLP who really need guidance.

Somehow I'm not surprised that the printer needs repairs. What I'm wondering here is whether we have over 100 boxes of responsive material, or whether a computer "phenomenon" did something like translate certain attachments into a bunch of incomprehensible code that prints one character per page. Given the specificity of the search and the brief time period, I am surprised by this volume. Any idea?

Brett,Adam;

I think it would be very beneficial to review the results electronically and print the responsive ones. Printing has never been a good option because of the nature and variety of E-mail.

As in the past, there are probably some of the E-mail that extend across several boxes of paper because of formatting characters within the E-mail or attachments, As to their responsiveness, only a manual review can tell.

I would like to deliver some of it, To where should it be delivered.

Later... Tony

TESTIMONY OF {PRIVATE }

TODD F. GAZIANO

SENIOR FELLOW IN LEGAL STUDIES AND DIRECTOR, CENTER FOR LEGAL AND JUDICIAL STUDIES

THE HERITAGE FOUNDATION*

214 MASSACHUSETTS AVENUE, NE
WASHINGTON, DC 20002

BEFORE THE UNITED STATES HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT REFORM

SUBCOMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT EFFICIENCY,
FINANCIAL MANAGEMENT AND INTERGOVERNMENTAL RELATIONS

REGARDING

H.R. 4187, THE "PRESIDENTIAL RECORDS ACT AMENDMENTS OF 2002"
AND OTHER PROCEEDURES FOR THE INVOCATION OF EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE

24 APRIL 2002

*The Heritage Foundation is a public policy, research, and educational organization. It is privately supported, and receives no funds from any government at any level; nor does it perform any government or other contract work. The Heritage Foundation is the most broadly supported think tank in the United States. During 2001, it had more than 152,000 individual, foundation, and corporate supporters representing every state. Its 2001 contributions came from the following sources: individuals and bequests (61%), foundations (27%), corporations (7%), investment income (2%), publication sales and other (3%). Staff of The Heritage Foundation testify as individuals. The views expressed are their own, and do not reflect an institutional position for The Heritage Foundation or its board of trustees.

Congress has broad discretion to restrict or overrule presidential executive orders that are based solely on a statutorily conferred power, although there still are some limits to the congressional micro-management of the President's execution of the laws. In other words, the greater power does not always include all lesser controls. See INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919 (1983).

Congress has some power to regulate executive directives based on shared constitutional powers, but it would depend on the facts, circumstances, and clauses at issue. With regard to the war powers, Congress may condition when and how the President shall call up reserves to serve in the armed forces of the United States, but as explained above, it could not dictate how the President communicates his tactical commands to troops in the field of battle.

With regard to powers conferred solely to the President by the Constitution, Congress has practically no authority to interfere with the President's management directives. The President may issue secret pardons or he may pardon whole categories of individuals in an executive order, as President Andrew Johnson did with regard to former confederate soldiers. See Legal Memorandum No. 2, supra at 11 (noting that the Supreme Court upheld President Johnson's blanket pardon).

Section 3 of H.R. 4187 states that E.O. 13233 "shall have no force and effect." Although E.O. 13233 relates to the implementation of the PRA, at its core, it establishes procedures for the invocation of presidential powers (executive privilege claims) that Congress cannot alter. It is axiomatic that the President's authority to implement his constitutional powers is "vested in [him] by the Constitution." See E.O. 13233, Preamble. Thus, E.O. 13233 contains the President's public statement regarding how he will exercise his constitutional power (and respect the constitutional power of former Presidents) within the framework of the PRA. It also contains his instructions to the Archivist in such matters.

H.R. 4187 does not purport to amend the framework of the PRA that is within Congress's power, but it is an attempt to modify, condition, and partially nullify incumbent and former Presidents constitutional powers. In these respects, H.R. 4187 would be void even if it were passed. In sum, it is H.R. 4187 that "shall have no force and effect," not E.O. 13233.

The Combined Defects of H.R. 4187

The combined defects of H.R. 4187 render it even more constitutionally questionable, in part because each defect compounds the rest. A 20-40 day initial review period is an even greater burden on a former President if he must also secure a court order within the next 20 days to enforce his privilege claims. Congress's attempt to elevate the Archivist over the President (with regard to constitutionally based privilege claims) is based on the mistaken premise that Congress can overrule a presidential management directive.

I have no doubt that this Subcommittee and full Committee have proceeded with their oversight and legislative hearings in good faith. But a President has a responsibility to vigorously resist any serious erosion in the power of his Office. Separation of powers principles require no less. If I were still in the Office of Legal Counsel, I would strongly urge the President to veto any legislation similar to H.R. 4187. I think the Department of Justice under any President would take the same position.

Conclusion

My belief that H.R. 4187 is a dead letter does not mean that the Subcommittee's hearings have served no constructive purpose. By highlighting the concerns of historians, journalists, and others regarding the time in which the President reviews documents subject to release under the PRA, I hope you have helped convince the White House to speed up its review process (although waging war is cause for some delay). But my sincere and respectful advice to this Subcommittee is that further progress must be based on a polite exchange with the White House rather than legislation that purports to dictate terms to the President.

If the Subcommittee continues pursuing H.R. 4187 or similar legislation, it will engage in a futile act that will waste its time, and possibly that of the President and the courts. But if the Subcommittee properly engages the White House on this issue, I am confident that the White House will reach some appropriate accommodation regarding the Subcommittee's concerns.

Thank you Chairman Horn and Members of the Subcommittee for inviting me to testify today on H.R. 4187. I will also be testifying more broadly on the procedures for the invocation of executive privilege under the Presidential Records Act and the resolution of those claims. As a former chief counsel of another subcommittee of the Government Reform Committee, I know that the Members of this Subcommittee, particularly its Chairman, are genuinely interested in hearing all relevant views and are open to them. That is fortunate for me, because I must reluctantly disagree with my friends who are testifying today and express my grave doubts about the constitutionality of H.R. 4187, the “Presidential Records Act Amendments of 2002.”

For the record, I am a Senior Fellow in Legal Studies and Director of the Center for Legal and Judicial Studies at The Heritage Foundation, a nonpartisan research and educational organization. I am a graduate of the University of Chicago Law School and a former law clerk to the U.S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals. Of special relevance today, I also served in the U.S. Department of Justice, Office of Legal Counsel (OLC), during separate periods in the Reagan, Bush, and Clinton Administrations, where I provided constitutional advice to the White House and four Attorneys General. Among its duties, OLC helps draft the President’s executive orders and is primarily responsible for advising him on matters relating to claims of executive privilege.

The Most Open Branch

Let me begin with an important observation about the relative openness of the three branches of government with regard to internal, deliberative documents. This observation runs counter to the impression several historians have conveyed in their testimony at previous hearings before this Subcommittee and full Committee. All three branches create and make available some public documents that announce proposed actions and final decisions, and these documents often contain an explanation for the proposed or final action. For example, courts issue legal opinions that explain the rationale for their decisions. Executive branch agencies publish proposed regulations with an explanation of why it is being proposed and final regulations with a statement of how public comments were taken into account. Congressional committees publish committee reports with the committees’ recommendations or conclusions, and most legislative acts are public.

But the executive is by far the most open of the federal branches in terms of the release of internal, deliberative documents—and almost every other kind of document. When President Lyndon Johnson signed the Freedom of Information Act, he granted broad access to most executive branch documents. That Act was significantly strengthened and made judicially enforceable in 1974. See 5 U.S.C. 552. Even without being asked, executive agencies routinely release countless documents and raw data, ranging from weather reports to crime statistics and from hearing records to tide charts.

With regard to presidential documents, the Supreme Court ruled in 1977 that most presidential papers are the personal property of each President. When President Carter signed the Presidential Records Act of 1978 (PRA), he made the presidential papers of all future Presidents public documents. Pub. L. 95-591, § 2(a) (further references are to the PRA as codified at 44 U.S.C. 2201-2207; § 2202 confers ownership to the United States). As a result, all presidential documents from President Reagan’s administration onward will eventually be released to the public. The PRA provides that a President may restrict access to certain types of sensitive presidential records for up to 12 years. See § 2204. After that, the majority of presidential documents are subject to release if a request is made. Some documents containing national security secrets may remain exempt from disclosure at that time, but are subject to eventual release after being declassified under the national security laws. Even documents which are subject to a valid claim of executive privilege will eventually be released, generally no later than thirty years after they are created.

Moreover, the President does not have the final say over whether his claim of privilege is valid or whether it will prevail over a given requester. His claim of executive privilege is presumptively valid, as it must be, but it may be overridden by a court with proper jurisdiction. In United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 713 (1974), the Supreme Court held that a party seeking to overcome a constitutionally based privilege must first establish a “specific need” for the particular records at issue. That may turn on the nature of the proceeding or request and the importance of that information to the proceeding or other use. If such a showing is made, the court will weigh the President’s interest in maintaining the confidentiality of the particular documents against the asserted need of the requester.

Thus, a special prosecutor or a congressional committee with subpoena power might well be able to overcome a weak claim of executive privilege if it is shown that specific documents are relevant and important to an official investigation. By contrast, a broad fishing expedition launched by a voyeur or conspiracy theorist would be insufficient. Nevertheless, the Supreme Court has explained that the executive branch’s interest in confidentiality wanes continually with the passage of time. After thirty years or so, such an interest might be easily defeated by a routine inquiry. In sum, every presidential document eventually will be released, and even in the short run, the President does not have the final word over the confidentiality of documents he claims are privileged.

The Most Dangerous Branch

In contrast, almost no documents maintained by individual Members of Congress, even those created with public funds, are subject to public release, and very few are released without the voluntary assent of the Member. If The New York Times wanted a copy of the internal memos that Senate staff wrote to Senators about some momentous public issue, it has no legal means to obtain them (even if the documents are more than twelve years old). If historians or members of the press wanted a copy of a Representative’s confidential calendar or if they wanted a copy of staff notes taken when particular interest groups met with the Member, it would have no legal recourse to get them. With enactment of new campaign finance legislation, a majority of both houses of Congress seem to have accepted the argument (mistaken in my view) that the potential for special interest groups to corrupt Members of Congress is great. Yet, the public has no enforceable right to examine correspondence between such special interest groups and Members of Congress. No matter how historically relevant or vital that information might be to an informed public, it’s our tough luck because no law or court can force their release (absent special circumstances such as a properly constituted criminal investigation).

Many of us also would be quite interested in reading the memoranda Supreme Court law clerks wrote to the justices that employ them. Historians and legal scholars would find memoranda one justice sent to another to be particularly valuable, even if the memos were about cases decided a decade or more ago. But none of us has any legally enforceable right to such memoranda, notwithstanding that these documents were produced with public funds and involve important decisions that have a tremendous impact on our lives. Even fifty years after a given case was decided, the heirs of a deceased justice have complete control over his or her official court papers. We get to see only what they want us to see.

I am not surprised that you have chosen to keep your internal staff documents and at least some of your communications with your colleagues confidential. My testimony today is in support of your secretive communications and private strategy sessions. I don’t think it would be prudent for you to force your fellow Members of Congress to release such documents. Although it would keep us better informed about your individual decision making processes and what influenced your decisions, it would not serve the overall public interest. The most probing legislative analysis is crystallized in writing, and good note taking is essential to almost any productive office. I don't want to inhibit your staff from giving you valuable and candid written advice, and I don't want to chill communications between you and your constituents or interest groups, whether they are "special" or not. But if Congress did force the release of such information, at least that would not violate the constitutional separation of powers. Congress probably can inflict such wounds upon itself.

Yet, the constitutional separation of powers does impose limits on Congress's attempts to invade or interfere with the private sphere of the other two co-equal branches. The separation of powers is not an amorphous, unwritten aspect of the Constitution. It is contained in the structure of our written Constitution and in many explicit provisions of the Constitution, including the vesting clauses of Article I, II, and III. As the framers made clear, its ultimate purpose is to protect individual liberty by preventing any one branch, or two branches together, from usurping authority and prerogatives that were granted to another branch. James Madison lamented that the separation of powers had broken down at the state level, and that the price of failure at the federal level was nothing less than tyranny. Federalist Nos. 47-48. It is easy for one branch to discount the harm that flows from the violation of this principle, but the separation of powers itself was designed to counter this bias. Indeed, the framers observed that the legislative branch was throughout history "the most dangerous branch," and they tried to strengthen the President's hand by creating an office with "energy in the [executive]." Federalist Nos. 48 and 70, respectively.

Executive Privilege and the Separation of Powers

Such refinements in separation of powers design take many forms and are among the most important innovations of the U.S. Constitution. The Supreme Court of the United States correctly recognized that constitutionally based privileges, including the executive privilege, are necessarily rooted in the separation of powers. Just as Congress may not order justices of the Supreme Court to release drafts of their opinions (even after they have been superseded by a published opinion), there are limits to how far Congress may invade the deliberative process and national security decisions of the President and his senior staff.

The Presidential Records Act made no attempt to expand or contract claims of executive privilege. Instead, it recognizes in subsection 2204(c)(2), and elsewhere, that Presidents will assert executive privilege with regard to some documents that are otherwise subject to release under the PRA. That subsection provides that "[n]othing in [the PRA] shall be construed to confirm, limit, or expand any constitutionally-based privilege which may be available to an incumbent or former President."

As Congress knew, the Supreme Court ruled in Nixon v. Administrator of General Services, 433 U.S. 425, 449 (1977), that some constitutionally based privileges "survive[] the individual President's tenure." Thus, former President Richard Nixon could continue to exercise the executive privilege with regard to documents from his administration. That decision also set forth the constitutional basis for including confidential communications within the privilege. "Unless [a President] can give his advisers some assurance of confidentiality, a President could not expect to receive the full and frank submissions of facts and opinions upon which effective discharge of his duties depend." Id. at 448-49.

The Supreme Court cited the practice of the framers during the Constitutional Convention, who ensured that the records of the Convention would be “sealed for more than 30 years.” Id. at 447 n.11. The framers did this for two reasons: (1) to promote vigorous and candid debate at the Convention, and (2) to permit the participants to present a unified front in support of the final product. A modern President has the same need to ensure confidential communications, especially among his senior advisors and cabinet officers. To get unvarnished advice, he must give assurances that the advice will remain confidential for some reasonable length of time. To ensure success in his administration, he must also ensure that the vigorous debate we want to take place on important matters does not leak out prematurely and undercut the implementation of what is ultimately decided.

Several historians who have testified before this Committee or commented publicly on E.O. 13233 have expressed skepticism about the proposition that presidential advisers would either trim their advice out of fear of criticism or grandstand with the eye toward history. The historian-objectors’ view conflicts with the Hawthorne Effect (a consequence of the Heisenberg Uncertainty Principle) of science and human affairs, which provides that the mere act of examining something or someone alters its/his character or behavior. The historians’ statements also have a self-contradictory quality, for they appear simultaneously to assert that the public remains tremendously interested in such confidential communications twelve or more years after the events have transpired but that none of the participants would ever bear that in mind. Apparently, the historians would have us believe that no high-ranking public official ever maintained a diary with the thought of using it for memoir.

This self-interested group of historians imply that they are the only ones who would be conscious enough of an historic moment to think about how future generations would react to it. Yet, the careers and reputations of government officials often extend beyond twelve years, and they are very conscious of this. The automatic release of deliberative documents, even after twelve years, would undoubtedly affect the advice a President receives when he most desperately needs frank advice: when the stakes are momentous and when the matter being debated is highly sensitive or subject to disagreement.

Even if the historian-objectors (who may represent a small subset of all historians) are correct, their argument should be addressed to the Supreme Court. It is the Supreme Court that held the executive privilege extends to confidential communications and deliberative documents. It was the Court that decided this was necessary to ensure candid and complete deliberations (correctly in my view). The objectors’ ire is misdirected at the President.

Executive Order 13233

President George W. Bush is the first President who has had to implement certain aspects of the PRA because he is the first President in office twelve years after the conclusion of the first administration (President Reagan’s) covered by the PRA. Last fall, President George W. Bush issued Executive Order No. 13233 to establish neutral procedures for the incumbent and former President to review documents subject to release and invoke constitutionally based privileges. The bulk of E.O. 13233 is not only lawful and prudent, but it is—with minor exceptions—practically the only way to implement the PRA consistent with the incumbent and former President’s constitutional obligations.

E.O. 13233 identifies several types of documents subject to constitutionally based privilege (state secrets, presidential communications, deliberative process documents). These are often thought of as subsets of the executive privilege. Separate laws govern the release of state secrets and national security information, and there is not much dispute that access to these documents should remain restricted. Some have argued, however, that all such documents are removed by the Archivist and his staff before a request under the PRA is processed. With all due respect to the staff of the Archivist and the Archivist himself, the President and former President have an independent duty to ensure that no classified documents that would harm national security are released. And in at least some cases, the President's and former President's access to other national security information would put them in a much better position to know whether a particular document implicates our national security or not.

Most of the outside criticism focuses on a former President's invocation of privilege with respect to documents that contain confidential communications or that reflect high-level, executive branch deliberations. But it is even more important for a former President to review these types of documents. It is possible, even likely, that only he is aware of the sensitive nature of many presidential documents from his administration. The incumbent President might be from another party and be unfamiliar with the relationships between the advisors and other officers in the former President's administration more than twelve years past. Moreover, the former President may have a direct recollection of the particular debate or discussion that the documents reflects. He may even remember specific requests for confidentiality or other reasons why the documents reveal a sensitive communication or deliberation.

The Supreme Court was not troubled that a former President might, in some cases, invoke executive privilege to protect former administration officials from embarrassment. Indeed, it is the former President's obligation to shield officials from embarrassment (with regard to confidential communications or high-level deliberations) if he thinks that course is necessary to preserve a confidential atmosphere within which future Presidents can receive complete and frank advice when they need it.

Accordingly, E.O. 13233 establishes procedures for the incumbent and former Presidents to review all documents that are being sought under the PRA for potentially privileged documents. The review period for a request made by a non-governmental party is up to 90 days, but it may be extended if the request is "unduly burdensome." E.O. 13222, § 3(b). The review period for a request originating from Congress or the Courts is 21 days, but it too may be extended if the request is "burdensome." Id., § 6. In the executive order, President Bush also instructs the Archivist to withhold all documents that either the incumbent or former President assert are privileged. Id., § 3(d). Finally, the executive order states that "[a]bsent compelling circumstances, the incumbent President will concur in the privilege decision of the former President" to release documents under the PRA. Id., § 4.

Executive Order 13233 and D.C. Circuit Law

A witness at the Subcommittee's earlier hearing asserted that Public Citizen v. Burke, 843 F.2d 1473 (D.C. Cir. 1988), was inconsistent with a former President's exercise of executive privilege in E.O. 13233, but that is not correct. In Burke, the D.C. Circuit Court struck down a Justice Department directive that was similar in some respects to E.O. 13233, § 3(d), but distinguishable in two other critical respects. The Justice Department directive instructed the Archivist to defer to any claim of privilege asserted by former President Nixon. In Nixon v. Administrator of GSA, the Supreme Court made clear that a former President could continue to assert executive privilege over documents from his administration, but that case did not consider a possible clash with the incumbent President. What if the incumbent President disagreed with a former President's privilege claim and instructed the Archivist not to honor the position of the former President? The D.C. Circuit believed that the Archivist's obligation to the incumbent President was paramount, and that he need not defer to a former president's claim if he concluded it was not proper.

Although I think the D.C. Circuit may have erred in Burke, E.O. 13233 is nevertheless fully consistent with it. The D.C. Circuit may have erred because I think the Archivist probably does have a responsibility to treat a former President's privilege claims as presumptively valid (pending resolution by a court), even if the incumbent President disagrees. That said, the D.C. Circuit was principally concerned about the Archivist's duty if he received conflicting instructions from the former President and the incumbent President. The Justice Department directive did not come from President Reagan himself, so a hypothetical conflict was possible.

In contrast, E.O. 13233 is an order from the incumbent President to the Archivist, instructing the Archivist to honor any privilege claim by a former president unless and until it is withdrawn or overturned by a court with proper jurisdiction. The executive order further states that "the incumbent President will support that privilege claim [by the former President] in any forum in which the privilege is challenged." § 4. To the extent that Burke rested on the Archivist's obligation to the incumbent President, that obligation is clear in E.O. 13233. Under E.O. 13233, the Archivist never has to take orders from a former President, but he does have to follow orders from the incumbent President. In effect, President George W. Bush has announced to the Archivist in advance that he will ratify and enforce a former President's claim of privilege whenever it is asserted. The result is that the Archivist is acting under the combined constitutional authority of the former President (who clearly retains some constitutional authority as against outside parties) and the incumbent President. Burke has nothing to say about that situation.

Analysis of H.R. 4187

With the preceding framework in mind, there are several provisions of H.R. 4187 that appear to be flatly unconstitutional and others raise serious constitutional concerns. These defects tend to compound each other, so that taken together, they render the entire bill even more clearly unconstitutional. The four most serious problems are analyzed below.

Subsection (c): Nullifying a Former President's Executive Order Authority

Subsection (c) of the proposed new section 2208 of title 44 is the most constitutionally problematic. The historian-objectors before this Committee and Subcommittee have expressed particular angst that the Supreme Court has allowed former presidents to continue to invoke executive privilege with regard to documents from their administrations. Subsection (c) provides that a former President's assertion of such privilege is good for only twenty days. After that period, the Archivist of the United States must release the documents unless the former President has already secured a court order barring the release.

Subsection (c) would effectively nullify a former President's right to assert executive privilege over documents from his administration—if it were constitutional. It would convert an executive privilege that is presumptively valid and can only be overturned by an affirmative court order into a right to delay the release for twenty days. The President's opportunity to seek court action does not cure the constitutional defect, because Congress simply has no power to take an exclusive presidential power and condition it on the assent of another branch. That is a basic tenet of separation of powers doctrine. It should be self evident that a power which flows from the separation of powers (the executive privilege) cannot be conditioned on approval from the courts (subsection (c)).

Subsection (c) may be predicated on the belief that the former President is in a better position to bear the cost of litigation than the requester. There are four logical responses to this notion. First, it is not true with regard to large media corporations. Second, Congress could subsidize such litigation, but in failing to do so, it makes more sense for the person who seeks to profit by such information to bear the cost of litigation—regardless of relative wealth. Third, the former President already must devote substantial amounts of time reviewing burdensome document requests for potentially privileged documents; he should not also have to bear the burden of initiating litigation when a requester might be perfectly satisfied with what is released. Fourth, and most important, a policy concern—no matter how well founded—cannot trump a constitutional right.

Subsection (a)(3): Inadequate and Inflexible Deadlines

When the President is exercising a power derived from the Constitution, as opposed to a statutory power, Congress has very limited authority to micromanage the timing of his actions. Congress could not pass a law requiring the President to make a pardon decision within 20 days after receipt of any such request from the Department of Justice. Nor could Congress require a President to decide whether to sign a treaty within 20 days of any international treaty convention. Many other examples are equally illustrative of the basic point: if the President derives a particular power from the Constitution and there is no time limit on the exercise of that power in the Constitution (such as a veto), Congress cannot impose one on his exercise of that power.

Nevertheless, subsection (a)(3) purports to grant the incumbent President and former President only 20 days, with the possibility of a 20-day extension, within which to assert any constitutionally based privilege claims. It does not matter what number of documents is being requested by an outside party or group of parties—be they 1,000 or 100,000. It does not matter that the President may be engaged in prosecuting a war or responding to a terrorist attack. It does not matter whether the former President is recovering from a stroke or is traveling on an important diplomatic mission. Moreover, subsection (a)(4) requires that the incumbent and former President personally sign every claim of privilege, so they must personally review each potentially privileged document.

An inflexible 20-40 day time frame for the review of thousands of documents and the invocation of privilege is imprudent to say the least. To the extent that it artificially burdens the President's need to exercise his executive privilege power and perform other vital obligations of his office, subsection (a)(3) is constitutionally dubious.

Several years ago, Congress extended the time President Clinton and future Presidents would have to fill vacancies in Senate-confirmed offices with acting appointments from 120 to 210 days, and that period can be further extended. 5 U.S.C. 3345-49. E.O. 13233 provides for an initial 21- or 90-day review period, with the possibility of an extension. I see no reason to interfere with this scheme, particularly for documents that are already twelve years or more old (although I understand the contrary argument).

If there was a vital need to place some outer limit on the President's initial review of documents, I think the most Congress could do is to authorize some sort of court supervision if the President failed to act within a reasonable length of time (say, 180 days). Such a proceeding might be analogous to a mandamus action to force an agency to rule on a petition under 5 U.S.C. 553(e). Since a proper court can overrule a claim of executive privilege, it might (with appropriate legislation) be able to force a President to make a decision that will trigger the potential litigation. Such a process is also more likely to be upheld by the Supreme Court because the lower court will have had the opportunity to consider the special facts and circumstances of each request and the length of delay.

Making the Archivist Superior to the President

Several provisions of H.R. 4187 violate a separate aspect of Article II and separation of powers doctrine when they attempt to make the Archivist the President's superior. The Constitution provides that "[t]he executive Power shall be vested in a President," not some of it. Art. II, § 1, cl. 1 (emphasis added). The Framers debated and rejected the creation of a plural executive in favor of a unitary executive. Their conscious design was to vest "the execution of [the laws] a single hand." Federalist No. 37. The Supreme Court properly held that this requires the President's control over all officers who exercise significant executive power. Meyers v. United States, 272 U.S. 52 (1926).

Subsection (a)(3)(B) requires the Archivist to deny the President an additional 20-days to review the requested documents unless the Archivist determines that "such an extension is necessary to allow an adequate review of the record." Imagine the following letter to the President from the Archivist: "Sorry Mr. President, but I just can't determine in good faith that an extension is 'necessary,' given that the confidential calendar you sent over for next week includes a golf outing, a fundraising banquet, and a trip to Europe (again!). Better luck next time."

Subsection (a)(4) requires the President to communicate his claim of executive privilege to the Archivist in a particular way, the failure of which purports to require the Archivist to treat the President's claim as invalid. Congress could not pass a law telling the President he must communicate all military orders in triplicate, using only approve congressional memo pads. The President may communicate his orders to his subordinates any way he wishes, orally or in writing, in polite terms or peppered with profanity. But according to subsection (a)(4), if the President does not dot all "i"s and cross all "t"s, the Archivist must treat his command to withhold the documents as a nullity.

Morrison v. Olson, 272 U.S. 654 (1988) muddies the constitutional waters somewhat, because it created an exception to the rule in Meyers for independent counsel under the now expired Ethics in Government Act. (Other exceptions for "independent" regulatory commissions are distinguishable because the Court concluded they do not exercise the executive authority.) Many constitutional scholars who used to defend Morrison v. Olson have ceased to do so in recent years, and perhaps the Court would rule differently today. But surely even the Morrison v. Olson Court would not sanction so basic a violation of the unitary executive doctrine in order to further the comparatively unimportant interest identified in H.R. 4187.

Attempting to Overrule E.O. 13233

A President may issue an executive order or other directive to implement any of the powers properly conferred to him. See generally Todd Gaziano, Legal Memorandum No. 2, "The Use and Abuse of Executive Orders and Other Presidential Directives," The Heritage Foundation, Feb. 21, 2001 (available at <http://www.heritage.org/library/testimony/test032201.html>). Congress's power to modify or overrule a presidential directive depends on the font of the President's authority over the subject matter of the directive. See id. at 4; Youngstown Sheet & Tube v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579 (1952) (the "Steel Seizure Case"). The President has express and implied powers conferred to him by the Constitution (e.g., the pardon power), powers that are shared with Congress under the Constitution (e.g., war powers), and powers that are conferred exclusively by statute (e.g., appropriations).

MEMORANDUM FOR ALL PERSONNEL IN [list WHO/EOP units]

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES
 COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: SENATE GOVERNMENTAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE REQUEST REGARDING ENRON

As you may know, the Chairman of the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs, Joseph Lieberman, has sent the White House a letter requesting certain information relating to Enron Corporation. The White House is cooperating with the Committee, and to the extent possible we intend to provide the Committee with appropriate information critical to its inquiry.

Accordingly, we ask that you complete the attached Questionnaire and return it to my office (West Wing, Second Floor) no later than May 17, 2002.

It is important that you read the Questionnaire carefully and make a good faith effort to answer each question to the best of your knowledge and recollection. If in answering any question it would help you to review any notes, documents, or e-mail to which you have reasonable access, you are expected to do so. We are not, however, asking you to provide copies of such materials to Counsel's Office at this time.

To minimize the immediate burden on you, the Questionnaire has been written so that you can respond to each question with a yes-or-no answer, and we are not asking for further explanation at this time. Instead, depending on your answers, the Counsel's Office may contact you for the purpose of obtaining additional information.

The Committee has not requested copies of completed Questionnaires, and therefore at this time we do not intend to provide them to the Committee. Please be aware, however, that it is possible the Committee will seek access to completed Questionnaires at a later date.

Please also be aware that the Counsel's Office and its members represent the President and White House staff in their official capacities and thus cannot represent you with respect to any personal interests you might have relating to this matter.

If you have any questions, please call me (6-1918), Tim Flanigan (6-6627), Brett Kavanaugh (6-7984), Brad Berenson (6-2318), or Chris Bartolomucci (6-7963).

Adam;

It is very difficult to give an estimate that has any accuracy to it because the quantity of print depends on the formatting of each record and that is impossible to predict.

We currently have 95 boxes of paper in the EOPDC and the printing is probably 75% complete.

The printing is currently stopped because the printer is down for repairs.

I would like to start the delivery process

Later... Tony

COUNCIL OF ECONOMIC ADVISERS
April 23, 2002

Update on Malpractice Cost Increases

Background

- Rising liability costs are a concern not only to health care providers but also to the Federal government. For example, Medicare incorporates malpractice costs its provider payment calculations. Most state Medicaid plans also account for some part of liability costs – and to the extent they do not, providers may refuse to treat Medicaid patients. Higher liability costs are also incorporated in private insurance premiums, which are tax-subsidized. Thus, eventually, a large share of the costs of higher liability are eventually borne by the Federal government.
- The cause of rising liability costs is rapidly rising malpractice awards – to the point that some malpractice carriers are refusing to offer insurance altogether. The second section of this memo describes the serious problems that providers are facing in many states.
- The national medical malpractice combined ratio (the ratio of paid claims to premiums) is nearing the level experienced at the height of the 1980s medical malpractice crisis. In 2001, insurers likely paid out $1.40 in claims for every dollar of premiums, compared with $1.60 in claims at the height of the 1980s' crisis.
- Jury awards for malpractice have skyrocketed in recent years. The median malpractice award grew 60% between 1997 and 1999 (from $500,000 to $800,000). In 1999 the median punitive damage award for medical malpractice cases was $515,000. The only cases with a higher median award were products liability suits ($2 million), where defendants are often large corporations.
- St. Paul (the largest medical malpractice insurance writer in the U.S. prior to its exit from the market in December 2001) saw twice as many claims for $1 million or more in 2000 than they did in 1999. Only 1.5% of all claims paid in 1990 were for $1 million or more, while 4.5% in 1998 were. Many analysts view this rapid and difficult-to-predict trend as a driving factor in the decision by St. Paul to pull back from the malpractice insurance markets (see below). Its exit will affect 42,000 physicians.
- The number of medical malpractice payment reports increased in 1999 and 2000 after falling at an average rate of 4% per year between 1996 and 1998. In the past 5 years the number of “reportable action reports” increased by almost 10% while the number of medical malpractice payment reports only increased by 1%.
- A rising number of large awards is thus the main contributing factor to the increase in malpractice costs for doctors. In 2000, median malpractice payments (by state) ranged from $55,000 (California) to $262,000 (Maine). The mean malpractice payment (by state) ranged from $142,637 (California) to $584,338 (Washington DC). Kansas was the only state in which the mean malpractice payment was less than the median. 40% of all jury awards are over $1 million, compared with 35% in the period from 1993 to 1995.

- High awards are generally related to poor outcomes that follow complex procedures – and in most cases are not the result of care that medical experts judge to be negligent. The highest average and median malpractice payments are for obstetrics and the most malpractice payments were made for claims that were diagnosis or surgery related.
- Medical malpractice premiums skyrocketed in recent years. In an AMA survey 8 States (AR, CT, IL, NV, NC, OH, PA & TX) reported premium increases of over 30% in 2002. The Texas Medical Liability Trust has raised rates by 100% over the last 2.5 years. New Jersey hospital medical malpractice insurance premiums jumped an average of 250% from 1999 to 2002.
- Considerable research indicates that higher malpractice premiums cause doctors to practice more “defensive medicine,” such as ordering extra tests or unnecessary procedures to provide legal cover in case a patient has a bad outcome. In a recent survey, roughly three quarters of physicians acknowledged that fear of litigation lead them to order more tests and more frequently refer patients to specialists than they would based only on their professional judgement of what is medically necessary. The excess health care costs resulting from defensive medicine are much greater than the direct costs of the malpractice system – potentially adding 2 to 4 percent each year to the costs of the entire health care system.
- Malpractice liability also leads to worse care and worse health for other reasons. As noted below, high malpractice costs are significantly threatening access to care in many parts of the country. And health care providers are reluctant to undertake initiatives to eliminate medical errors and improve quality, for fear that any information they develop on opportunities to improve care will be used against them in court. Additionally, 61% of physicians have noticed physicians being reluctant to make what they categorize as humane choices at the end of a patient’s life due to a fear of litigation.

Long Term Care

- Rising liability costs in nursing homes are a major cause of rapid growth in the cost of nursing home care, which is mostly financed by Medicaid and Medicare. Between 1990 and 2001 general liability and professional liability (GL/PL) loss costs increased from $240 per annual occupied skilled nursing bed to $2,360 per bed. Most of this increase took place after 1995. Florida ($11,000) and Texas ($5,500) had the highest per bed costs in 2001.
- Nursing home malpractice costs are rising because of rapid increases in both the number of lawsuits and the size of awards. Between 1990 and 2001, the average size of a GL/PL claim tripled and the average number of claims for long term care operators increased from 3.6 claims per 1000 beds to 11 claims per 1000 beds.
- A very large share of these liability costs go to lawyers. Altogether, 47% of the total GL/PL claims costs goes to attorneys (this includes the defendant’s legal costs, which are roughly 40% of the total dollars that attorneys get).

- Even excluding “high cost” states, GL/PL loss costs are increasing at a rate of 20% per year. This is much faster growth than in other industries, where GL/PL claim costs tend to increase between 5% and 10% per year.

State Malpractice Laws Have Major Implications for Malpractice Costs, Federal Health Care Spending, and Access to Care

California

- California (like Utah, New Mexico, and other states) has a cap on jury awards for pain and suffering. California limits such awards to $250,000.
- The 5 largest California insurers requested malpractice insurance rate increases of only 2% to 8% for 2002, while the rest of the country faced increases of 10% to 30%. Furthermore, the rates in California are already relatively low. The base rate for a California obstetrician is around $35,000 per year. The same doctor would pay between $80,000 and $120,000 in Pennsylvania. (San Francisco Business Times, October 15, 2001).
- Medical malpractice insurance is only about 10% of doctors’ revenues in California, down from 25%. Nationally, premiums generally average between 10% and 25% of a physician’s gross revenues. The premium for an obstetrician in PA would be more than twice as much as it would be for the same obstetrician in CA.

Pennsylvania

- Ohio, Pennsylvania, West Virginia have relatively high medical malpractice costs, and have faced significant cost increases this year.
- The PA Medical Association found that it costs $96,199 to cover an orthopedic surgeon in PA and less than $40,000 to cover one in Delaware and New Jersey. According to the president of the PA Medical Society, their 2001 survey found that 72% of doctors deferred purchasing new medical equipment or didn’t hire needed staff because of “sudden and sharp increases” in malpractice insurance premiums.
- PA has recently taken legislative steps to try to curb the cost increases (including the partial privatization and eventual phase-out of the PA CAT fund, shortening the statute of limitations, and allowing judges to lower awards in some cases).

Nevada

- Malpractice Insurance Availability in Nevada:
 - The Nevada Division of Insurance conducted a survey of 11 insurers offering medical malpractice insurance in Nevada. The respondents indicated that punitive damages were the largest contributor to the cost of claims, followed by legal fees.

- St. Paul, the largest insurer, pulled out of Nevada in 2001 and 4 other insurers left the market in 2002. Those 5 insurers provided 70% of the State's malpractice coverage.
- The Governor's Plan:
 - It was concluded at a state hearing in March, 2002 that medical malpractice insurance was not readily available in Nevada, so the state was designated as the insurer of last resort. Beginning on April 15, 2002, Nevada will sell medical malpractice insurance through the newly established Medical Liability Association of Nevada. This is meant to be a stop-gap measure, and the Governor intends to work with the Legislature to institute market reforms.
 - Premiums will be set to cover projected losses and expenses and are not expected to be below the rates available in the private market. The Association will have the right to refuse to insure physicians deemed to be an "unacceptable risk." Participating medical professionals will each be assessed a one-time fee to cover any Association losses. The Board will also develop a "cost stabilization option" so that each physician could choose to pay a fee in lieu of any end of the year assessments. The plans offered by the State will not cover prior acts. According to local newspapers, physicians expect to pay as much as $100,000 for "tail coverage."
- Anecdotes from Nevada Newspapers:
 - "More than half of the surgeons working at Southern Nevada's only trauma center are poised to quit if Gov. Kenny doesn't soon commit to limiting malpractice liability in Nevada" (Las Vegas Review-Journal, March 21, 2002).
 - Over 20% of Clark County's OB-GYNs are actively considering leaving Nevada (i.e. calling medical boards in other states to transfer certification, looking for other jobs, etc) because malpractice rates are going from $40,000 to as much as $200,000. 78% of Clark County physicians responding to a survey by a researcher at the University of Nevada School of Medicine indicated that they will leave the State if the legislature does not undertake tort reform. These physicians represent 40% of the OB-GYNs in Clark County (Las Vegas Review-Journal, March 23, 2002)

Common Good
Fear of Litigation Study
The Impact on Medicine

Final Report

April 11, 2002

Conducted for:

Common Good

Field Dates:
March 4-20, 2002

Project Managers:

Humphrey Taylor, Chairman, The Harris Poll
David Krane, Senior Vice President
Amy Cottreau, Project Manager
Diana Gravitch, Senior Research Associate

Conversations with colleagues appear to be impacted by the fear of litigation. While more than two-thirds of both physicians and nurses report that frank discussions of an adverse event or error at least sometimes helps them or a colleague avoid making a similar mistake in an actual medical case, many report that their colleagues are often uncomfortable having such conversations.

- Only one-fourth or fewer of physicians, nurses and hospital administrators think that their colleagues are very comfortable discussing adverse events or uncertainty about proper treatment with them.
- Even fewer – roughly 5% -- think that their colleagues are very comfortable discussing medical errors with them.

Fear of liability is cited by physicians and hospital administrators as the leading factor that discourages medical professionals from openly discussing and thinking of ways to reduce medical errors. By comparison, nurses are more likely to point to not wanting to upset or criticize a colleague as a main reason. Although hospital administrators and nurses somewhat disagree, physicians feel that fear of liability at least sometimes also leads to hospitals avoiding disclosing quality deficiencies and is the primary reason why hospitals do not share the results of inquiries into patient injury cases. [See Tables 14-19]

Patient relationships also appear to be somewhat impacted by litigation concerns. While the overwhelming majority of nurses report that malpractice concerns have not impacted their patient relations and discussions at all, significant numbers of physicians feel that malpractice concerns have made their relationships with patients less personal (38%) and caused them to be more candid in their conversations with patients (43%). Interestingly, perceptions differ greatly between hospital administrators and physicians and nurses on whether physicians have become more likely to admit errors and apologize. While half (51%) of all hospital administrators think that physicians have become more likely to admit errors and apologize, only one-fourth of nurses and physicians themselves think this is true. [See Tables 20-23]

One area where there is clear agreement is the influence of the fear of litigation on administrative issues. Well over three-fourths of all physicians and nurses (84% and 81%, respectively) report that they spend more time on paper work, such as medical record documentation, because of malpractice concerns than they would based solely on the patient's clinical needs. Additionally, nearly all physicians (94%) believe that written descriptions of cases are very often or sometimes influenced by the fear of litigation. [See Tables 24-25]

Physicians, nurses and hospital administrators were somewhat divided on whether or not their interpretation of the November 1999 Institute of Medicine reports which suggested that between 44,000 and 98,000 patients die annually in the United States as a result of preventable hospital errors however they generally disagreed with this finding. Their views on malpractice claims were more common. The clear majority of physicians, nurses and hospital administrators all feel that malpractice claims occur mainly from adverse results rather than actual error. Physicians see the patient/physician relationship as the most important factors in determining whether or not an injured patient brings a lawsuit or not. Quality of communications as well as greed and the patient's financial status are also noted as important factors by physicians, nurses and hospital administrators. [See Tables 28-30]

That many medical professionals behavior is clearly influenced by the fear of litigation can perhaps be explained by the finding that the overwhelming majority of physicians (83%) and hospital administrators (72%) do not feel that physicians can trust the current system of justice to achieve a reasonable result if sued. When coupled with the previously noted finding that most feel that malpractice claims occur mainly from adverse results rather than actual error this sense of distrust in the current system is underscored. It is not surprising then, that physicians nearly unanimously, as well as at least three-fourths of nurses and hospital administrators would instead favor switching to a medical court presided over by independent medical professionals and other experts that would have authority to review and decide injury cases.

Suggestions by physicians and hospital administrators for improving the malpractice and patient safety situation include a number of legal reforms such as caps on judgments/ liability, general tort reform, as well as improved communication with patients. Nurses were more likely to look to improved patient communication and staff education improvements for possible improvement. While changes in levels of career satisfaction have caused roughly half of physicians, nurses, and hospital administrators to consider leaving medicine, changes made by HMOs as well as those brought about by the threat of malpractice liability have had nearly as great an impact upon physicians. [See Tables 26, 27, & 31-33]

In summary, it is clear that the practice of medicine and the delivery of medical care are significantly influenced and shaped by fear of malpractice claims and perceived unreliability of the current system of justice. With adverse consequences ranging from cost implications to quality of care the impact of the fear of litigation cannot be ignored and is an area that should be included in any efforts to improve medicine in America today and restore health to health care.

DETAILED ANALYSIS OF RESULTS

Table 1Quality of Medical Care Over Past Five Years

Although feelings are mixed both within and across sample groups, half of all physicians feel that the ability to provide quality medical care to patients has gotten worse over the past five years. In contrast, the plurality of nurses and hospital administrators feel that things have improved.

Q205 Setting aside improvements in technology or medical knowledge, do you think the ability of physicians and nurses to provide quality medical care to patients has improved, has gotten worse or is it about the same as it was five years ago?

Base: All respondents

	Physicians	Nurses	Hospital Administrators
	%	%	%
Improved	31	44	55
Worse	51	28	24
About the same	17	28	19

Table 2Impact on Providing Quality Patient Care

While physicians, nurses and hospital administrators generally agree on the impact of various influences on their ability to provide quality care, physicians are more likely to feel that managed care plans have hurt their ability to provide quality care. Nurses are more likely to feel that patient advocacy groups have made a positive impact on their ability to provide quality care and are less likely to have personally felt a negative impact because of concerns about malpractice litigation.

Q211 In recent years, has each of the following helped, hurt or not made a difference in your ability to provide quality patient care?

Base: All respondents

	Physicians			Nurses			Hospital Administrators
	Hurt	Helped	No Difference	Hurt	Helped	No Difference	Hurt	Helped	No Difference
	%	%	%	%	%	%	%	%	%

Concern about malpractice litigation	76	4	21	41	6	51	63	6	30

Table 3Awareness of Malpractice Liability

Experience clearly has increased the awareness and concern among all respondents about the risks of malpractice liability. Perhaps not surprisingly, nurses are less likely to report an increase with one-third saying their views haven't changed since the beginning of their career.

Q225 Since the beginning of your career, would you say your concern or awareness about the risks of malpractice liability has . . . ?

Base: All respondents

Table 4Avoided Specialty For Fear of Legal Exposure?

While the majority of physicians have not shied away from an interest in a specialty due to concerns about higher legal exposure, a significant minority of nearly one in three have avoided an area due to liability concerns.

Q235 Have you ever been interested in a certain specialty but shied away from it because you thought you'd have higher legal exposure?

Base: All physicians

Table 5Willingness to Assist When Off-Duty

Liability concerns impact behavior outside of the hospital or office environment as just over half of all physicians know of those who hesitate or are reluctant to assist an injured person when off-duty and one-third say they know of an instance where a physician did not volunteer to help because of the fear of litigation.

Q241 Do you have personal knowledge of . . . ?

Base: All physicians

Physicians Only
% “Yes”

Table 6Impact of Liability Concerns on Tests and Procedures

Physicians and hospital administrators strongly agree that the fear of medical malpractice causes physicians to act much differently than they would based solely on their professional medical judgment. Nurses generally share this view, but are less strong in their agreement.

Q306 Based on your experience, have you noticed the fear of malpractice liability causing physicians to . . . ?

Base: All respondents

Table 7Impact of Liability Concerns on Physicians Personal Behavior

When talking about their own behavior, physicians report that they personally often do more than they feel is medically needed because of concerns about malpractice liability. Compared with their observations of physicians in general, physicians were somewhat less likely to report that they themselves had their behavior influenced in this way – particularly when it came to prescribing more medications and ordering invasive procedures.

Q306 Based on your experience, have you noticed the fear of malpractice liability causing physicians to . . . ?

Base: All respondents

Q311 Do concerns about malpractice liability ever cause you to . . . ?

Base: All physicians

Table 8Impact on Health Care Costs

Given the high rate at which physicians, nurses and hospital administrators report that extra tests, referrals and procedures are being done, it is not surprising that they are viewed as having a significant impact on health care costs.

Q315 Do you think such extra tests, referrals or procedures contribute in a significant way to health care costs?

Base: All respondents

Table 9Impact of Liability Concerns on End of Life Issues

Liability concerns also impact decisions made by physicians at the end of a patient's life. Roughly half of all physicians and nearly as many nurses and hospital administrators report that they are aware of physicians resorting to aggressive treatments, being reluctant to make humane choices, and even going against a patient's expressed wishes due to liability concerns.

Q321 Based on your experience, have you noticed . . . ?

Base: All respondents

Table 10Excessive Care Provided Due to Fear of Medical Liability

In summary, physicians clearly feel that unnecessary or excessive care is at least sometimes provided due to malpractice concerns. Hospital administrators agree with physicians while thinking it is slightly less of an issue. Nurses however, view this as occurring more rarely.

Q325 Based on your experience, how often do you think unnecessary or excessive care is provided because of the fear of medical liability?

Base: All respondents

Base:	300	100	100

Table 11Nurses Views on Impact of Liability Protection Rules or Protocols

Although not a major obstacle for most nurses, nearly half of all nurses feel that rules or protocol established for liability protection prohibit or discourage them at least sometimes from doing what they feel is right for the patient.

Q330 How often do you feel prohibited or discouraged from doing what you think is right for the patient because of rules or protocols set up for liability protection – would you say very often, sometimes, rarely or never?

Base: All nurses

Table 12Hospital Administrators Views on Creation of Liability Protection Rules or Protocols

While hospital administrators feel that established rules and protocol have improved or enhanced patient safety, they also think that unnecessary rules of protocol are often created because of liability concerns.

Q335 In establishing procedures, to what extent do you think unnecessary rules of protocol are created out of a concern about liability protection – would you say very often, sometimes, rarely or never?

Q337 To what extent do you think that established rules or protocol have improved or enhanced patient safety - would you say a lot, a little, or not at all?

Base: All hospital administrators

Hospital Administrators OnlyCreation of Unnecessary*Impact on Patient

Table 13Hospital Environment for Reporting Medical Errors

While nearly all nurses and hospital administrators feel their hospitals encourage the reporting of medical errors, physicians are somewhat less likely to feel this way with roughly one-third reporting an environment that neither encourages nor discourages error reporting.

Q220 On the whole, in your hospital, or the hospital to which the majority of our patients are admitted, are staff encouraged to or discouraged from reporting medical errors, including dispensing incorrect medications or medication doses, surgical mistakes and human error in interpreting results of diagnostic tests?

Base: All respondents

Table 14Discussing Adverse Events With Colleagues

Nurses and hospital administrators are somewhat more likely than physicians to report that their colleagues are comfortable discussing adverse events with them.

Q405 How comfortable do you think your colleagues are discussing adverse events or uncertainty about proper treatment with you?

Base: All respondents

Table 15Discussing Medical Errors With Colleagues

While the majority of all groups feel that colleagues are uncomfortable discussing medical errors, physicians and nurses are even more likely to report feeling this way.

Table 16Impact of Discussing Medical Errors in Avoiding Similar Mistakes

Despite the previously noted finding that many are uncomfortable discussing adverse events and errors, physicians and nurses both report that such discussions are very often or sometimes helpful in avoiding making similar mistakes in actual medical cases.

Table 17Impact on Discussions About Medical Errors

Among physicians and hospital administrators, fear of liability is the leading factor that discourages open discussions about how to reduce medical errors. While fear of liability is also significant for nurses, not wanting to upset or criticize a colleague is seen as slightly more important in discouraging these discussions.

Q421 Generally speaking, how much do you think that each of the following discourages medical professionals from openly discussing and thinking of ways to reduce medical errors?

Table 18Impact of Fear of Liability on Disclosing Quality Deficiencies

Unlike hospital administrators and nurses, three-fourths of physicians see fear of liability as at least sometimes leading hospitals to avoid disclosing quality deficiencies.

Q425 How often do you think that fear of liability leads hospitals to avoiding disclosing quality deficiencies?

Base: All respondents

Table 19Impact of Fear of Liability on Sharing Patient Inquiry Results

Physicians again have a stronger view on the significance of liability concerns on impacting hospital behavior. More than half feel that liability concerns are the primary reason why hospitals do not share the results of inquiries into patient injury cases. Nurses and hospital administrators generally agree but are more likely to feel it is a minor reason.

Q430 How significant of a factor do you think liability concerns are in hospitals not sharing the results of inquiries into patient injury cases?

Base: All respondents

Table 20Impact on Relationship With Patients

Nurses overwhelmingly report that malpractice concerns have not impacted their relationships with patients. Physicians however, display a more mixed response. Although many report no impact on patient relations, over one-third say that malpractice concerns have made their relationships less personal. One in six feel their relationships with patients have become more personal as a result of these concerns.

Q505 Would you say that concerns about malpractice have made your relationship with your patients . . . ?

Base: Physicians and Nurses

Table 21Impact on Discussions With Patients

Once again, most nurses don't feel their discussions with patients have been impacted at all by malpractice concerns. Nearly half of all physicians say they are more candid in their discussions with patients because of malpractice worries. Only one in six physicians feel that malpractice concerns have caused them to be less candid with patients.

Q510 Would you say that concerns about malpractice have caused you to be . . . ?

Base: Physicians and Nurses

Table 22Use of Fear of Litigation to Avoid Difficult Discussions

Most physicians themselves think that fear of litigation is rarely or never used as an excuse or way to avoid difficult discussions of errors with patients. Hospital administrators and nurses are more likely to think that physicians do this.

Q515 Some people have argued that physicians may use the fear of litigation as an excuse or way to avoid difficult discussions of errors with patients. How often do you think physicians do this?

Base: All respondents

Table 23Physicians Admitting Errors and Apologizing to Patients

Views among the three groups differ greatly when it comes to physicians admitting errors and apologizing. Hospital administrators think that this has become more likely to occur. Physicians feel that since they have been practicing it has become less likely or not changed at all. Most nurses have not seen any change in this at all during the years that they have been practicing.

Q520 In the years that you have been practicing, do you think that physicians have become more likely to admit errors and apologize to patients, less likely, or hasn't this changed at all?

Base: All respondents

Table 24Time Spent on Paperwork Due to Malpractice Concerns

Both physicians and nurses are nearly unanimous that malpractice concerns cause them to spend more time on paper work than they otherwise would.

Q605 Would you say that you spend more time on paper work, such as medical record documentation, because of malpractice concerns than you would based solely on the patient's clinical needs?

Base: All respondents

Table 25Case Documentation Influenced by Fear of Litigation?

Fear of litigation not only impacts the amount of paper work, but also content. Nearly all physicians report that written descriptions of cases are influenced by malpractice concerns. Nurses and hospital administrators also agree with this perception.

Table 26Trust the Justice System in the Event of Law Suit

Perhaps because they are somewhat shielded from litigation concerns, nurses are most likely to think that physicians can trust the current justice system. Physicians and hospital administrators on the other hand disagree that physicians can expect to achieve a reasonable result if sued.

APPENDIX A: METHODOLOGY

METHODOLOGY

AN OVERVIEW

The Fear of Litigation Study – The Impact on Medicine was conducted for Common Good by Harris Interactive Inc. The final results are based on interviews with representative samples of 300 physicians, 100 hospital-based nurses, and 100 hospital administrators. Interviews averaging 15 minutes in length took place between March 4 and 20, 2002. The physicians interviews were conducted online and the results were weighted using the AMA Physician Masterfile to be representative of physicians in the United States. The nurses and hospital administrators were interviewed by telephone. The following provides a more detailed description of the sampling and interviewing procedures used.

HARRIS POLL ONLINE OVERVIEW

Harris Interactive's online interviewing of physicians utilized The Harris Interactive Physician Panel Online which consists of practicing physicians involved in "hands-on" patient care in the United States who have agreed to participate in online research about healthcare-related issues. In addition to Primary Care Physicians, every major medical specialty and sub-specialty are represented among the members of the Panel.

Interviews conducted online utilized Harris Interactive's proprietary technology for e-mailing to large groups of respondents and enabling large numbers of respondents to simultaneously complete the survey online; and utilized advanced survey interviewing techniques, adapted to the online environment, including password protection, skip patterns, and visually-appealing fonts and formatting.

Randomly selected Harris Interactive Physician Panel members received email invitations with unique IDs and passwords, along with a link to the survey site. Physicians were offered an honorarium of $50 or $65 for their participation. Data were weighted to reflect the general population of general practitioners and specialist physicians. The AMA Physician Masterfile was used to create weighting targets, which included medical specialty, sex and geographic region.

ONLINE INTERVIEWING PROCEDURES

Physician interviews are conducted using a self-administered, online questionnaire, via proprietary, web-assisted interviewing software. The HPOL interviewing system permits online data entry of interviews by the respondents.

Questionnaires are programmed into the system with the following checks:

1. Question and response series
2. Skip pattern
3. Question rotation
4. Range checks
5. Mathematical checks
6. Consistency checks
7. Special edit procedures

All data are tabulated, checked for internal consistency and processed by computer. A series of computer-generated tables is then produced for each of the key sample groups showing the results of each survey question, both by the total number of respondents and by the key subgroups.

CONTROL OF THE SAMPLE

To maintain the reliability and integrity in the sample, the following procedures are used:

1. Password protection. Each invitation contains a password that is uniquely assigned to that e-mail address. A respondent is required to enter the password at the beginning of the survey to gain access into the survey. Password protection ensures that a respondent completes the survey only one time.
2. Reminder invitations. To increase the number of respondents in the survey and to improve overall response rates, up to two additional reminder invitations are typically mailed at 2-4 day intervals to those respondents who have not yet participated in the survey. For this study, two reminders were sent to respondents.

EDITING AND CLEANING THE DATA

The data-processing staff perform machine edits and additional cleaning for the entire data set. Our edit programs act as a verification of the skip instructions and other data checks that are written into the online program. The edit programs list any errors by case number, question number and type. These are then resolved by senior personnel, who inspect the original file and made appropriate corrections. Complete records are kept of all such procedures.

SIGNIFICANCE TESTING*Reliability of Survey Percentages*

It is important to bear in mind that the results from any sample survey are subject to sampling variation. The magnitude of this variation (or error) is affected both by the number of interviews—the base size—and by the level of the percentages expressed in the results.

Table A-1 shows the possible sample variation that applies to percentage results for this survey. The chances are 95 in 100 that a survey result does not vary, plus or minus, by more than the indicated number of percentage points from the result that would have been obtained if interviews were conducted with all persons in the universe represented by the sample. For example, if the response for a sample size of 300 is 30%, then in 95 cases out of 100, the response in the total population would have been between 25% and 35% (+/-5%). Note that survey results based on subgroups of small size can be subject to large sampling error.

Table A-1Recommended Allowance for Sampling Error of Proportions (Plus or Minus)

Sample Size	Survey Percentage Result
	10% or 90%	20% or 80%	30% or 70%	40% or 60%	50%
300	3	5	5	6	6
200	4	6	6	7	7
100	6	8	9	10	10
50	8	11	13	14	14

Significance of Differences Between Proportions

Sampling tolerances are also involved in the comparison of results from different surveys or from different parts of a sample from the same survey (subgroup analysis). Table A-2 shows the percentage difference that must be obtained before a difference can be considered statistically significant. These figures, too, represent the 95% confidence level.

To illustrate, suppose the two percentages in question are 34% and 25%. More specifically, suppose that one group of 300 has a response of 34% “yes” to a question, and an independent group has a response of 25% to the same question, for an observed difference of 9 percentage points. According to the table, this difference is subject to a potential sampling error of 6-7 percentage points. Since the observed difference is greater than the sampling error, the observed difference is significant.

Sampling Error of Difference Between Proportions
 Approximate Sampling Tolerances (at 95% Confidence Level)
 To Use in Evaluating Differences Between Two Percentage Results

Sample Sizes		Survey Percentage Result
		10% or 90%	20% or 80%	30% or 70%	40% or 60%	50%
300 v.	300	5	6	7	8	8
	200	5	7	8	9	9
	100	7	9	10	11	11
	50	9	12	14	15	15
200 v.	200	6	8	9	10	10
	100	7	10	11	12	12
	50	9	12	14	15	15
100 v.	100	8	11	13	14	14
	50	10	14	16	17	17
50 v.	50	12	16	18	19	20

Sampling error of the type so far discussed is only one type of error. Survey research is also susceptible to other types of error, such as refusals to be interviewed (non-response error), question wording and question order, interviewer error, and weighting by demographic control data. Although difficult or impossible to quantify these types of error, the procedures followed by Harris Interactive, Inc. keep errors of these types to a minimum.

INTRODUCTION

The Fear of Litigation Study – The Impact on Medicine was conducted for Common Good among a national sample of physicians, nurses and hospital administrators. This survey sought to provide some insight into the impact of the fear of litigation on the practice of medicine and the delivery of medical care. Broadly the survey focused on the following areas:

- Judgments about tests and medical care
- Interactions with patients and other physicians
- Proposals for change

METHODOLOGICAL OVERVIEW

Interviews for The Fear of Litigation Study – The Impact on Medicine were conducted both via telephone as well as online. 300 physicians were interviewed online using Harris Interactive's Physician Panel. 100 hospital-based nurses and 100 hospital administrators were interviewed by telephone. Interviews averaging 15 minutes in length took place between March 4 and 20, 2002.

The three sample groups were selected not only because they make up the key constituents in the delivery of medical care, but also because we thought that they might have different views on the subject matter and perhaps even different abilities or incentives to be either forthcoming or reserved on the subject matter.

One of the interesting and rather surprising findings of the study was the willingness of physicians to fully disclose not only their views on how the fear of litigation impacts the behavior of physicians in general, but also their own behavior.

A detailed survey methodology including a description of the sampling and survey administration procedures is contained in Appendix A. The complete data-sheeted questionnaire is found in Appendix B.

NOTES ON READING TABLES

The base on each question is the total number of respondents answering that question. An asterisk (*) on a table signifies a value of less than one-half percent (0.5%). A dash represents a value of zero. Percentages may not always add up to 100% because of computer rounding or the acceptance of multiple answers from respondents answering that question. Note that in some cases results may be based on small sample sizes. Caution should be used in drawing any conclusion from results based on these small samples.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Medicine is clearly a highly dynamic and ever-changing field. Technological and scientific advances, the development of HMOs and managed care, as well as societal changes all shape it on an on-going basis. Although malpractice litigation has its roots back in the mid-1800s, one area of interest is how the increasingly litigious nature of American society today is influencing the field of medicine. Rather than explore the number of suits, the size of jury awards, or the costs of malpractice insurance, this survey sought to explore -- through interviews with physicians, nurses and hospital administrators -- how the fear of litigation affects the practice of medicine and the delivery of medical care.

The results are striking. Concerns about liability are influencing medical decision-making on many levels. From the increased ordering of tests, medications, referrals, and procedures to increased paperwork and reluctance to offer off-duty medical assistance, the impact of the fear of litigation is far-reaching and profound.

Broadly, half (51%) of all physicians think that their ability to provide quality medical care to patients has gotten worse in the past five years. Further, more than three-fourths of physicians feel that concern about malpractice litigation (76%) has hurt their ability to provide quality care in recent years. All respondent groups report increased levels of concern or awareness about the risks of malpractice liability over their career and nearly one-third (29%) of physicians state that they have been interested in a certain specialty but shied away from it due to fear of higher legal exposure. These findings seem to suggest that the broad impact of the fear of litigation is significant and growing. [See Tables 1 - 4]

Some of the more arresting study findings are on the impact of liability concerns on the provision of medical care. Broadly, nearly all physicians and hospital administrators feel that unnecessary or excessive care is very often or sometimes provided because of fear about litigation. More specifically, physicians report that the fear of malpractice claims causes themselves and/or other physicians to:

- Order more tests than they would based only on professional judgment of what is medically needed. (91% have noticed other physicians, and 79% report they themselves do this due to concerns about malpractice liability)
- Refer patients to specialists more often than they would based only on their professional judgment of what is medically needed. (85% have noticed other physicians, and 74% report they themselves do this due to concerns about malpractice liability)

- Suggest invasive procedures such as biopsies to confirm diagnoses more often than they would based only on their professional judgment of what is medically needed. (73% have noticed other physicians, and 51% report they themselves do this due to concerns about malpractice liability)
- Prescribe more medications such as antibiotics than they would based only on their professional judgment of what is medically needed. (73% have noticed other physicians, and 41% report they themselves do this due to concerns about malpractice liability)

A similar, although slightly less dramatic trend is seen when looking at patient end of life issues.

- Just under two-thirds (61%) of physicians have noticed physicians being reluctant to make what they believe to be humane choices because of concerns that a family member might bring suit.
- Half (50%) have noticed a physician resorting to aggressive treatments of terminally ill patients because of liability concerns.
- Just under half (42%) have noticed a physician or staff member going against a patient's expressed wishes concerning life-prolonging medical interventions because of concerns that a family member might bring suit.

Not surprisingly, there is nearly unanimous agreement among physicians, nurses and hospital administrators that these extra tests, referrals and procedures contribute in a significant way to health care costs issues. [See Tables 6-10]

Views on the conducive nature of the hospital environment are mixed when it comes to issues of medical errors and liability protocol. Strong majorities of hospital administrators and nurses feel that staff in their hospital are encouraged to report medical errors such as dispensing incorrect medication or medication doses, surgical mistakes and human error in interpreting results of diagnostic tests. Only two thirds (63%) of physicians, however, agree perhaps due to a greater sense of personal exposure. [See Tables 11-13]

- Hospital administrators feel that while established rules and protocol have clearly improved or enhanced patient safety, they also believe that unnecessary rules of protocol are often created out of a concern about liability protection.
- Nearly half (43%) of all nurses also feel prohibited or discouraged from doing what they think is right for the patient because of rules or protocols set up for liability protection.

Somehow I'm not surprised that the printer needs repairs. What I'm wondering here is whether we have over 100 boxes of responsive material, or whether a computer "phenomenon" did something like translate certain attachments into a bunch of incomprehensible code that prints one character per page. Given the specificity of the search and the brief time period, I am surprised by this volume. Any idea?

Adam;

It is very difficult to give an estimate that has any accuracy to it because the quantity of print depends on the formatting of each record and that is impossible to predict.

We currently have 95 boxes of paper in the EOPDC and the printing is probably 75% complete.

The printing is currently stopped because the printer is down for repairs.

I would like to start the delivery process

Subject: IMPORTANT: Your certification needed on attached
Department of Justice form

According to our records, we have not received a signed certification from you on the form that is attached to this e-mail. The form relates to the Department of Justice's criminal investigation of the unauthorized disclosure last year of confidential government information concerning the blocking and freezing of the assets of the Global Relief Foundation, the Benevolence International Foundation, and the Holy Land Foundation. Please complete and sign the attached form and return it to Brent Greenfield in Room 160 1/2 no later than close of business Wednesday, April 24. If you have any questions or cannot complete the form in that time frame, please contact me at 6-7984.

As part of the certification, you are also asked to produce all official documents in your possession (including any e-mails and internal memoranda you have retained) that:

a) were created (or are dated) between September 11, 2001 and on or before September 30, 2001, and indicate that the Global Relief Foundation and/or the Benevolence International Foundation was being considered for inclusion on a list of organizations whose assets would be frozen by the United States government; or

REV_00144014

b) were created (or are dated) on or before December 4, 2001, and indicate that the Holy Land Foundation was being considered for inclusion on a list of suspected terrorist fund-raising organizations or would otherwise have its assets blocked or frozen by the United States government; or

c) were created (or are dated) on or before December 14, 2001, and indicate that the Global Relief Foundation was to be searched or would have its assets frozen or blocked on or about December 14, 2001 or which discusses the expected date and time of any such action.

CERTIFICATION

I certify, to the best of my knowledge, that

_____ I had access

_____ I did not have access

- a) on or before September 30, 2001, to the information that the Global Relief Foundation and/or the Benevolence International Foundation was being considered for inclusion on a list of organizations whose assets would be frozen; or
- b) on or before December 3, 2001, to the information that a search would be conducted of (or that a blocking action would be taken against) the Holy Land Foundation on December 4, 2001; or
- c) on or before December 13, 2001, to the information that a blocking action would be taken against (or that a search would be conducted of) the Global Relief Foundation on December 14, 2001.

I further certify, to the best of my knowledge, that

_____ I have produced to the Office of the Counsel to the President all official documents in my possession (including any e-mails and internal memoranda I have) responsive to the document production directive in the e-mail memorandum to which this Certification was attached.

_____ I have conducted a search and determined that I have no such documents.

I understand that the information and documents I provide to the Office of the Counsel to the President are likely to be disclosed to the U.S. Department of Justice for use in its criminal investigation and that the Counsel's Office is not acting as my private attorney in this matter.

I further understand that this Certification is for purposes of a federal criminal investigation and that intentional false statements may result in criminal penalties or other sanctions.

REV_00144027

COUNCIL OF ECONOMIC ADVISERS
April 23, 2002

Update on Malpractice Cost Increases

Background

- Rising liability costs are a concern not only to health care providers but also to the Federal government. For example, Medicare incorporates malpractice costs its provider payment calculations. Most state Medicaid plans also account for some part of liability costs – and to the extent they do not, providers may refuse to treat Medicaid patients. Higher liability costs are also incorporated in private insurance premiums, which are tax-subsidized. Thus, eventually, a large share of the costs of higher liability are eventually borne by the Federal government.
- The cause of rising liability costs is rapidly rising malpractice awards – to the point that some malpractice carriers are refusing to offer insurance altogether. The second section of this memo describes the serious problems that providers are facing in many states.
- The national medical malpractice combined ratio (the ratio of paid claims to premiums) is nearing the level experienced at the height of the 1980s medical malpractice crisis. In 2001, insurers likely paid out $1.40 in claims for every dollar of premiums, compared with $1.60 in claims at the height of the 1980s' crisis.
- Jury awards for malpractice have skyrocketed in recent years. The median malpractice award grew 60% between 1997 and 1999 (from $500,000 to $800,000). In 1999 the median punitive damage award for medical malpractice cases was $515,000. The only cases with a higher median award were products liability suits ($2 million), where defendants are often large corporations.
- St. Paul (the largest medical malpractice insurance writer in the U.S. prior to its exit from the market in December 2001) saw twice as many claims for $1 million or more in 2000 than they did in 1999. Only 1.5% of all claims paid in 1990 were for $1 million or more, while 4.5% in 1998 were. Many analysts view this rapid and difficult-to-predict trend as a driving factor in the decision by St. Paul to pull back from the malpractice insurance markets (see below). Its exit will affect 42,000 physicians.
- The number of medical malpractice payment reports increased in 1999 and 2000 after falling at an average rate of 4% per year between 1996 and 1998. In the past 5 years the number of “reportable action reports” increased by almost 10% while the number of medical malpractice payment reports only increased by 1%.
- A rising number of large awards is thus the main contributing factor to the increase in malpractice costs for doctors. In 2000, median malpractice payments (by state) ranged from $55,000 (California) to $262,000 (Maine). The mean malpractice payment (by state) ranged from $142,637 (California) to $584,338 (Washington DC). Kansas was the only state in which the mean malpractice payment was less than the median. 40% of all jury awards are over $1 million, compared with 35% in the period from 1993 to 1995.

- High awards are generally related to poor outcomes that follow complex procedures – and in most cases are not the result of care that medical experts judge to be negligent. The highest average and median malpractice payments are for obstetrics and the most malpractice payments were made for claims that were diagnosis or surgery related.
- Medical malpractice premiums skyrocketed in recent years. In an AMA survey 8 States (AR, CT, IL, NV, NC, OH, PA & TX) reported premium increases of over 30% in 2002. The Texas Medical Liability Trust has raised rates by 100% over the last 2.5 years. New Jersey hospital medical malpractice insurance premiums jumped an average of 250% from 1999 to 2002.
- Considerable research indicates that higher malpractice premiums cause doctors to practice more “defensive medicine,” such as ordering extra tests or unnecessary procedures to provide legal cover in case a patient has a bad outcome. In a recent survey, roughly three quarters of physicians acknowledged that fear of litigation lead them to order more tests and more frequently refer patients to specialists than they would based only on their professional judgement of what is medically necessary. The excess health care costs resulting from defensive medicine are much greater than the direct costs of the malpractice system – potentially adding 2 to 4 percent each year to the costs of the entire health care system.
- Malpractice liability also leads to worse care and worse health for other reasons. As noted below, high malpractice costs are significantly threatening access to care in many parts of the country. And health care providers are reluctant to undertake initiatives to eliminate medical errors and improve quality, for fear that any information they develop on opportunities to improve care will be used against them in court. Additionally, 61% of physicians have noticed physicians being reluctant to make what they categorize as humane choices at the end of a patient’s life due to a fear of litigation.

Long Term Care

- Rising liability costs in nursing homes are a major cause of rapid growth in the cost of nursing home care, which is mostly financed by Medicaid and Medicare. Between 1990 and 2001 general liability and professional liability (GL/PL) loss costs increased from $240 per annual occupied skilled nursing bed to $2,360 per bed. Most of this increase took place after 1995. Florida ($11,000) and Texas ($5,500) had the highest per bed costs in 2001.
- Nursing home malpractice costs are rising because of rapid increases in both the number of lawsuits and the size of awards. Between 1990 and 2001, the average size of a GL/PL claim tripled and the average number of claims for long term care operators increased from 3.6 claims per 1000 beds to 11 claims per 1000 beds.
- A very large share of these liability costs go to lawyers. Altogether, 47% of the total GL/PL claims costs goes to attorneys (this includes the defendant’s legal costs, which are roughly 40% of the total dollars that attorneys get).

- Even excluding “high cost” states, GL/PL loss costs are increasing at a rate of 20% per year. This is much faster growth than in other industries, where GL/PL claim costs tend to increase between 5% and 10% per year.

State Malpractice Laws Have Major Implications for Malpractice Costs, Federal Health Care Spending, and Access to Care

California

- California (like Utah, New Mexico, and other states) has a cap on jury awards for pain and suffering. California limits such awards to $250,000.
- The 5 largest California insurers requested malpractice insurance rate increases of only 2% to 8% for 2002, while the rest of the country faced increases of 10% to 30%. Furthermore, the rates in California are already relatively low. The base rate for a California obstetrician is around $35,000 per year. The same doctor would pay between $80,000 and $120,000 in Pennsylvania. (San Francisco Business Times, October 15, 2001).
- Medical malpractice insurance is only about 10% of doctors’ revenues in California, down from 25%. Nationally, premiums generally average between 10% and 25% of a physician’s gross revenues. The premium for an obstetrician in PA would be more than twice as much as it would be for the same obstetrician in CA.

Pennsylvania

- Ohio, Pennsylvania, West Virginia have relatively high medical malpractice costs, and have faced significant cost increases this year.
- The PA Medical Association found that it costs $96,199 to cover an orthopedic surgeon in PA and less than $40,000 to cover one in Delaware and New Jersey. According to the president of the PA Medical Society, their 2001 survey found that 72% of doctors deferred purchasing new medical equipment or didn’t hire needed staff because of “sudden and sharp increases” in malpractice insurance premiums.
- PA has recently taken legislative steps to try to curb the cost increases (including the partial privatization and eventual phase-out of the PA CAT fund, shortening the statute of limitations, and allowing judges to lower awards in some cases).

Nevada

- Malpractice Insurance Availability in Nevada:
 - The Nevada Division of Insurance conducted a survey of 11 insurers offering medical malpractice insurance in Nevada. The respondents indicated that punitive damages were the largest contributor to the cost of claims, followed by legal fees.

- St. Paul, the largest insurer, pulled out of Nevada in 2001 and 4 other insurers left the market in 2002. Those 5 insurers provided 70% of the State's malpractice coverage.
- The Governor's Plan:
 - It was concluded at a state hearing in March, 2002 that medical malpractice insurance was not readily available in Nevada, so the state was designated as the insurer of last resort. Beginning on April 15, 2002, Nevada will sell medical malpractice insurance through the newly established Medical Liability Association of Nevada. This is meant to be a stop-gap measure, and the Governor intends to work with the Legislature to institute market reforms.
 - Premiums will be set to cover projected losses and expenses and are not expected to be below the rates available in the private market. The Association will have the right to refuse to insure physicians deemed to be an "unacceptable risk." Participating medical professionals will each be assessed a one-time fee to cover any Association losses. The Board will also develop a "cost stabilization option" so that each physician could choose to pay a fee in lieu of any end of the year assessments. The plans offered by the State will not cover prior acts. According to local newspapers, physicians expect to pay as much as $100,000 for "tail coverage."
- Anecdotes from Nevada Newspapers:
 - "More than half of the surgeons working at Southern Nevada's only trauma center are poised to quit if Gov. Kenny doesn't soon commit to limiting malpractice liability in Nevada" (Las Vegas Review-Journal, March 21, 2002).
 - Over 20% of Clark County's OB-GYNs are actively considering leaving Nevada (i.e. calling medical boards in other states to transfer certification, looking for other jobs, etc) because malpractice rates are going from $40,000 to as much as $200,000. 78% of Clark County physicians responding to a survey by a researcher at the University of Nevada School of Medicine indicated that they will leave the State if the legislature does not undertake tort reform. These physicians represent 40% of the OB-GYNs in Clark County (Las Vegas Review-Journal, March 23, 2002)

Conversations with colleagues appear to be impacted by the fear of litigation. While more than two-thirds of both physicians and nurses report that frank discussions of an adverse event or error at least sometimes helps them or a colleague avoid making a similar mistake in an actual medical case, many report that their colleagues are often uncomfortable having such conversations.

- Only one-fourth or fewer of physicians, nurses and hospital administrators think that their colleagues are very comfortable discussing adverse events or uncertainty about proper treatment with them.
- Even fewer – roughly 5% -- think that their colleagues are very comfortable discussing medical errors with them.

Fear of liability is cited by physicians and hospital administrators as the leading factor that discourages medical professionals from openly discussing and thinking of ways to reduce medical errors. By comparison, nurses are more likely to point to not wanting to upset or criticize a colleague as a main reason. Although hospital administrators and nurses somewhat disagree, physicians feel that fear of liability at least sometimes also leads to hospitals avoiding disclosing quality deficiencies and is the primary reason why hospitals do not share the results of inquiries into patient injury cases. [See Tables 14-19]

Patient relationships also appear to be somewhat impacted by litigation concerns. While the overwhelming majority of nurses report that malpractice concerns have not impacted their patient relations and discussions at all, significant numbers of physicians feel that malpractice concerns have made their relationships with patients less personal (38%) and caused them to be more candid in their conversations with patients (43%). Interestingly, perceptions differ greatly between hospital administrators and physicians and nurses on whether physicians have become more likely to admit errors and apologize. While half (51%) of all hospital administrators think that physicians have become more likely to admit errors and apologize, only one-fourth of nurses and physicians themselves think this is true. [See Tables 20-23]

One area where there is clear agreement is the influence of the fear of litigation on administrative issues. Well over three-fourths of all physicians and nurses (84% and 81%, respectively) report that they spend more time on paper work, such as medical record documentation, because of malpractice concerns than they would based solely on the patient's clinical needs. Additionally, nearly all physicians (94%) believe that written descriptions of cases are very often or sometimes influenced by the fear of litigation. [See Tables 24-25]

Physicians, nurses and hospital administrators were somewhat divided on whether or not their interpretation of the November 1999 Institute of Medicine reports which suggested that between 44,000 and 98,000 patients die annually in the United States as a result of preventable hospital errors however they generally disagreed with this finding. Their views on malpractice claims were more common. The clear majority of physicians, nurses and hospital administrators all feel that malpractice claims occur mainly from adverse results rather than actual error. Physicians see the patient/physician relationship as the most important factors in determining whether or not an injured patient brings a lawsuit or not. Quality of communications as well as greed and the patient's financial status are also noted as important factors by physicians, nurses and hospital administrators. [See Tables 28-30]

That many medical professionals behavior is clearly influenced by the fear of litigation can perhaps be explained by the finding that the overwhelming majority of physicians (83%) and hospital administrators (72%) do not feel that physicians can trust the current system of justice to achieve a reasonable result if sued. When coupled with the previously noted finding that most feel that malpractice claims occur mainly from adverse results rather than actual error this sense of distrust in the current system is underscored. It is not surprising then, that physicians nearly unanimously, as well as at least three-fourths of nurses and hospital administrators would instead favor switching to a medical court presided over by independent medical professionals and other experts that would have authority to review and decide injury cases.

Suggestions by physicians and hospital administrators for improving the malpractice and patient safety situation include a number of legal reforms such as caps on judgments/ liability, general tort reform, as well as improved communication with patients. Nurses were more likely to look to improved patient communication and staff education improvements for possible improvement. While changes in levels of career satisfaction have caused roughly half of physicians, nurses, and hospital administrators to consider leaving medicine, changes made by HMOs as well as those brought about by the threat of malpractice liability have had nearly as great an impact upon physicians. [See Tables 26, 27, & 31-33]

In summary, it is clear that the practice of medicine and the delivery of medical care are significantly influenced and shaped by fear of malpractice claims and perceived unreliability of the current system of justice. With adverse consequences ranging from cost implications to quality of care the impact of the fear of litigation cannot be ignored and is an area that should be included in any efforts to improve medicine in America today and restore health to health care.

DETAILED ANALYSIS OF RESULTS

Table 1Quality of Medical Care Over Past Five Years

Although feelings are mixed both within and across sample groups, half of all physicians feel that the ability to provide quality medical care to patients has gotten worse over the past five years. In contrast, the plurality of nurses and hospital administrators feel that things have improved.

Q205 Setting aside improvements in technology or medical knowledge, do you think the ability of physicians and nurses to provide quality medical care to patients has improved, has gotten worse or is it about the same as it was five years ago?

Base: All respondents

	Physicians	Nurses	Hospital Administrators
	%	%	%
Improved	31	44	55
Worse	51	28	24
About the same	17	28	19

Table 2Impact on Providing Quality Patient Care

While physicians, nurses and hospital administrators generally agree on the impact of various influences on their ability to provide quality care, physicians are more likely to feel that managed care plans have hurt their ability to provide quality care. Nurses are more likely to feel that patient advocacy groups have made a positive impact on their ability to provide quality care and are less likely to have personally felt a negative impact because of concerns about malpractice litigation.

Q211 In recent years, has each of the following helped, hurt or not made a difference in your ability to provide quality patient care?

Table 3Awareness of Malpractice Liability

Experience clearly has increased the awareness and concern among all respondents about the risks of malpractice liability. Perhaps not surprisingly, nurses are less likely to report an increase with one-third saying their views haven't changed since the beginning of their career.

Q225 Since the beginning of your career, would you say your concern or awareness about the risks of malpractice liability has . . . ?

Table 4Avoided Specialty For Fear of Legal Exposure?

While the majority of physicians have not shied away from an interest in a specialty due to concerns about higher legal exposure, a significant minority of nearly one in three have avoided an area due to liability concerns.

Q235 Have you ever been interested in a certain specialty but shied away from it because you thought you'd have higher legal exposure?

Base: All physicians

Table 5Willingness to Assist When Off-Duty

Liability concerns impact behavior outside of the hospital or office environment as just over half of all physicians know of those who hesitate or are reluctant to assist an injured person when off-duty and one-third say they know of an instance where a physician did not volunteer to help because of the fear of litigation.

Table 6Impact of Liability Concerns on Tests and Procedures

Physicians and hospital administrators strongly agree that the fear of medical malpractice causes physicians to act much differently than they would based solely on their professional medical judgment. Nurses generally share this view, but are less strong in their agreement.

Q306 Based on your experience, have you noticed the fear of malpractice liability causing physicians to . . . ?

Table 7Impact of Liability Concerns on Physicians Personal Behavior

When talking about their own behavior, physicians report that they personally often do more than they feel is medically needed because of concerns about malpractice liability. Compared with their observations of physicians in general, physicians were somewhat less likely to report that they themselves had their behavior influenced in this way – particularly when it came to prescribing more medications and ordering invasive procedures.

Table 8Impact on Health Care Costs

Given the high rate at which physicians, nurses and hospital administrators report that extra tests, referrals and procedures are being done, it is not surprising that they are viewed as having a significant impact on health care costs.

Q315 Do you think such extra tests, referrals or procedures contribute in a significant way to health care costs?

Base: All respondents

Table 9Impact of Liability Concerns on End of Life Issues

Liability concerns also impact decisions made by physicians at the end of a patient's life. Roughly half of all physicians and nearly as many nurses and hospital administrators report that they are aware of physicians resorting to aggressive treatments, being reluctant to make humane choices, and even going against a patient's expressed wishes due to liability concerns.

Q321 Based on your experience, have you noticed . . . ?

Table 10Excessive Care Provided Due to Fear of Medical Liability

In summary, physicians clearly feel that unnecessary or excessive care is at least sometimes provided due to malpractice concerns. Hospital administrators agree with physicians while thinking it is slightly less of an issue. Nurses however, view this as occurring more rarely.

Q325 Based on your experience, how often do you think unnecessary or excessive care is provided because of the fear of medical liability?

Table 13Hospital Environment for Reporting Medical Errors

While nearly all nurses and hospital administrators feel their hospitals encourage the reporting of medical errors, physicians are somewhat less likely to feel this way with roughly one-third reporting an environment that neither encourages nor discourages error reporting.

Table 17Impact on Discussions About Medical Errors

Among physicians and hospital administrators, fear of liability is the leading factor that discourages open discussions about how to reduce medical errors. While fear of liability is also significant for nurses, not wanting to upset or criticize a colleague is seen as slightly more important in discouraging these discussions.

Q421 Generally speaking, how much do you think that each of the following discourages medical professionals from openly discussing and thinking of ways to reduce medical errors?

Base: All respondents

	Physicians			Nurses			Hospital Administrators

Table 18Impact of Fear of Liability on Disclosing Quality Deficiencies

Unlike hospital administrators and nurses, three-fourths of physicians see fear of liability as at least sometimes leading hospitals to avoid disclosing quality deficiencies.

Q425 How often do you think that fear of liability leads hospitals to avoiding disclosing quality deficiencies?

Base: All respondents

Table 19Impact of Fear of Liability on Sharing Patient Inquiry Results

Physicians again have a stronger view on the significance of liability concerns on impacting hospital behavior. More than half feel that liability concerns are the primary reason why hospitals do not share the results of inquiries into patient injury cases. Nurses and hospital administrators generally agree but are more likely to feel it is a minor reason.

Q430 How significant of a factor do you think liability concerns are in hospitals not sharing the results of inquiries into patient injury cases?

Base: All respondents

Table 20Impact on Relationship With Patients

Nurses overwhelmingly report that malpractice concerns have not impacted their relationships with patients. Physicians however, display a more mixed response. Although many report no impact on patient relations, over one-third say that malpractice concerns have made their relationships less personal. One in six feel their relationships with patients have become more personal as a result of these concerns.

Q505 Would you say that concerns about malpractice have made your relationship with your patients . . . ?

Base: Physicians and Nurses

Table 21Impact on Discussions With Patients

Once again, most nurses don't feel their discussions with patients have been impacted at all by malpractice concerns. Nearly half of all physicians say they are more candid in their discussions with patients because of malpractice worries. Only one in six physicians feel that malpractice concerns have caused them to be less candid with patients.

Q510 Would you say that concerns about malpractice have caused you to be . . . ?

Base: Physicians and Nurses

Table 22Use of Fear of Litigation to Avoid Difficult Discussions

Most physicians themselves think that fear of litigation is rarely or never used as an excuse or way to avoid difficult discussions of errors with patients. Hospital administrators and nurses are more likely to think that physicians do this.

Q515 Some people have argued that physicians may use the fear of litigation as an excuse or way to avoid difficult discussions of errors with patients. How often do you think physicians do this?

Base: All respondents

Table 23Physicians Admitting Errors and Apologizing to Patients

Views among the three groups differ greatly when it comes to physicians admitting errors and apologizing. Hospital administrators think that this has become more likely to occur. Physicians feel that since they have been practicing it has become less likely or not changed at all. Most nurses have not seen any change in this at all during the years that they have been practicing.

Q520 In the years that you have been practicing, do you think that physicians have become more likely to admit errors and apologize to patients, less likely, or hasn't this changed at all?

Table 24Time Spent on Paperwork Due to Malpractice Concerns

Both physicians and nurses are nearly unanimous that malpractice concerns cause them to spend more time on paper work than they otherwise would.

Q605 Would you say that you spend more time on paper work, such as medical record documentation, because of malpractice concerns than you would based solely on the patient's clinical needs?

Base: All respondents

Table 25Case Documentation Influenced by Fear of Litigation?

Fear of litigation not only impacts the amount of paper work, but also content. Nearly all physicians report that written descriptions of cases are influenced by malpractice concerns. Nurses and hospital administrators also agree with this perception.

Table 26Trust the Justice System in the Event of Law Suit

Perhaps because they are somewhat shielded from litigation concerns, nurses are most likely to think that physicians can trust the current justice system. Physicians and hospital administrators on the other hand disagree that physicians can expect to achieve a reasonable result if sued.

Although opinion is clearly divided, most physicians, nurses and hospital administrators do not think the problem of medical errors in the United States is as large as the Institute of Medicine's 1999 report suggests.

Q215 In November 1999, the Institute of Medicine (IOM) released two reports dealing with the problem of medical errors in the U.S. saying that between 44,000 and 98,000 patients annually die as a result of preventable hospital errors. Table 31Improvements for Malpractice/Patient Safety Situation

Physicians and hospital administrators both would look to make changes to the legal system in order to improve the malpractice/patient safety situation in the United States. Improved communication and discussion of errors are also seen as important. Leading improvements noted by nurses include better informed patients, increased hospital staff, increased staff education as well as liability judgment caps.

Table 32Actual Case Descriptions Where Fear Of Liability Contributed to Bad Result

While many respondents could not cite a specific case, prolonged life support with not chance of survival or against a patient's wishes as well as unnecessary testing and procedures were the most noted among those physicians and hospital administrators. Nurses most often described a case where death or severe reaction occurred due to over medication or incorrect medication.

APPENDIX A: METHODOLOGY

METHODOLOGY

AN OVERVIEW

The Fear of Litigation Study – The Impact on Medicine was conducted for Common Good by Harris Interactive Inc. The final results are based on interviews with representative samples of 300 physicians, 100 hospital-based nurses, and 100 hospital administrators. Interviews averaging 15 minutes in length took place between March 4 and 20, 2002. The physicians interviews were conducted online and the results were weighted using the AMA Physician Masterfile to be representative of physicians in the United States. The nurses and hospital administrators were interviewed by telephone. The following provides a more detailed description of the sampling and interviewing procedures used.

HARRIS POLL ONLINE OVERVIEW

Harris Interactive's online interviewing of physicians utilized The Harris Interactive Physician Panel Online which consists of practicing physicians involved in "hands-on" patient care in the United States who have agreed to participate in online research about healthcare-related issues. In addition to Primary Care Physicians, every major medical specialty and sub-specialty are represented among the members of the Panel.

Interviews conducted online utilized Harris Interactive's proprietary technology for e-mailing to large groups of respondents and enabling large numbers of respondents to simultaneously complete the survey online; and utilized advanced survey interviewing techniques, adapted to the online environment, including password protection, skip patterns, and visually-appealing fonts and formatting.

Randomly selected Harris Interactive Physician Panel members received email invitations with unique IDs and passwords, along with a link to the survey site. Physicians were offered an honorarium of $50 or $65 for their participation. Data were weighted to reflect the general population of general practitioners and specialist physicians. The AMA Physician Masterfile was used to create weighting targets, which included medical specialty, sex and geographic region.

ONLINE INTERVIEWING PROCEDURES

Physician interviews are conducted using a self-administered, online questionnaire, via proprietary, web-assisted interviewing software. The HPOL interviewing system permits online data entry of interviews by the respondents.

Questionnaires are programmed into the system with the following checks:

1. Question and response series
2. Skip pattern
3. Question rotation
4. Range checks
5. Mathematical checks
6. Consistency checks
7. Special edit procedures

All data are tabulated, checked for internal consistency and processed by computer. A series of computer-generated tables is then produced for each of the key sample groups showing the results of each survey question, both by the total number of respondents and by the key subgroups.

CONTROL OF THE SAMPLE

To maintain the reliability and integrity in the sample, the following procedures are used:

1. Password protection. Each invitation contains a password that is uniquely assigned to that e-mail address. A respondent is required to enter the password at the beginning of the survey to gain access into the survey. Password protection ensures that a respondent completes the survey only one time.
2. Reminder invitations. To increase the number of respondents in the survey and to improve overall response rates, up to two additional reminder invitations are typically mailed at 2-4 day intervals to those respondents who have not yet participated in the survey. For this study, two reminders were sent to respondents.

EDITING AND CLEANING THE DATA

The data-processing staff perform machine edits and additional cleaning for the entire data set. Our edit programs act as a verification of the skip instructions and other data checks that are written into the online program. The edit programs list any errors by case number, question number and type. These are then resolved by senior personnel, who inspect the original file and made appropriate corrections. Complete records are kept of all such procedures.

SIGNIFICANCE TESTING*Reliability of Survey Percentages*

It is important to bear in mind that the results from any sample survey are subject to sampling variation. The magnitude of this variation (or error) is affected both by the number of interviews—the base size—and by the level of the percentages expressed in the results.

Table A-1 shows the possible sample variation that applies to percentage results for this survey. The chances are 95 in 100 that a survey result does not vary, plus or minus, by more than the indicated number of percentage points from the result that would have been obtained if interviews were conducted with all persons in the universe represented by the sample. For example, if the response for a sample size of 300 is 30%, then in 95 cases out of 100, the response in the total population would have been between 25% and 35% (+/-5%). Note that survey results based on subgroups of small size can be subject to large sampling error.

Table A-1Recommended Allowance for Sampling Error of Proportions (Plus or Minus)

Sample Size	Survey Percentage Result
	10% or 90%	20% or 80%	30% or 70%	40% or 60%	50%
300	3	5	5	6	6
200	4	6	6	7	7
100	6	8	9	10	10
50	8	11	13	14	14

Significance of Differences Between Proportions

Sampling tolerances are also involved in the comparison of results from different surveys or from different parts of a sample from the same survey (subgroup analysis). Table A-2 shows the percentage difference that must be obtained before a difference can be considered statistically significant. These figures, too, represent the 95% confidence level.

To illustrate, suppose the two percentages in question are 34% and 25%. More specifically, suppose that one group of 300 has a response of 34% “yes” to a question, and an independent group has a response of 25% to the same question, for an observed difference of 9 percentage points. According to the table, this difference is subject to a potential sampling error of 6-7 percentage points. Since the observed difference is greater than the sampling error, the observed difference is significant.

Sampling Error of Difference Between Proportions
 Approximate Sampling Tolerances (at 95% Confidence Level)
 To Use in Evaluating Differences Between Two Percentage Results

Sample Sizes		Survey Percentage Result
		10% or 90%	20% or 80%	30% or 70%	40% or 60%	50%
300 v.	300	5	6	7	8	8
	200	5	7	8	9	9
	100	7	9	10	11	11
	50	9	12	14	15	15
200 v.	200	6	8	9	10	10
	100	7	10	11	12	12
	50	9	12	14	15	15
100 v.	100	8	11	13	14	14
	50	10	14	16	17	17
50 v.	50	12	16	18	19	20

Sampling error of the type so far discussed is only one type of error. Survey research is also susceptible to other types of error, such as refusals to be interviewed (non-response error), question wording and question order, interviewer error, and weighting by demographic control data. Although difficult or impossible to quantify these types of error, the procedures followed by Harris Interactive, Inc. keep errors of these types to a minimum.

INTRODUCTION

The Fear of Litigation Study – The Impact on Medicine was conducted for Common Good among a national sample of physicians, nurses and hospital administrators. This survey sought to provide some insight into the impact of the fear of litigation on the practice of medicine and the delivery of medical care. Broadly the survey focused on the following areas:

- Judgments about tests and medical care
- Interactions with patients and other physicians
- Proposals for change

METHODOLOGICAL OVERVIEW

Interviews for The Fear of Litigation Study – The Impact on Medicine were conducted both via telephone as well as online. 300 physicians were interviewed online using Harris Interactive's Physician Panel. 100 hospital-based nurses and 100 hospital administrators were interviewed by telephone. Interviews averaging 15 minutes in length took place between March 4 and 20, 2002.

The three sample groups were selected not only because they make up the key constituents in the delivery of medical care, but also because we thought that they might have different views on the subject matter and perhaps even different abilities or incentives to be either forthcoming or reserved on the subject matter.

One of the interesting and rather surprising findings of the study was the willingness of physicians to fully disclose not only their views on how the fear of litigation impacts the behavior of physicians in general, but also their own behavior.

A detailed survey methodology including a description of the sampling and survey administration procedures is contained in Appendix A. The complete data-sheeted questionnaire is found in Appendix B.

NOTES ON READING TABLES

The base on each question is the total number of respondents answering that question. An asterisk (*) on a table signifies a value of less than one-half percent (0.5%). A dash represents a value of zero. Percentages may not always add up to 100% because of computer rounding or the acceptance of multiple answers from respondents answering that question. Note that in some cases results may be based on small sample sizes. Caution should be used in drawing any conclusion from results based on these small samples.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Medicine is clearly a highly dynamic and ever-changing field. Technological and scientific advances, the development of HMOs and managed care, as well as societal changes all shape it on an on-going basis. Although malpractice litigation has its roots back in the mid-1800s, one area of interest is how the increasingly litigious nature of American society today is influencing the field of medicine. Rather than explore the number of suits, the size of jury awards, or the costs of malpractice insurance, this survey sought to explore -- through interviews with physicians, nurses and hospital administrators -- how the fear of litigation affects the practice of medicine and the delivery of medical care.

The results are striking. Concerns about liability are influencing medical decision-making on many levels. From the increased ordering of tests, medications, referrals, and procedures to increased paperwork and reluctance to offer off-duty medical assistance, the impact of the fear of litigation is far-reaching and profound.

Broadly, half (51%) of all physicians think that their ability to provide quality medical care to patients has gotten worse in the past five years. Further, more than three-fourths of physicians feel that concern about malpractice litigation (76%) has hurt their ability to provide quality care in recent years. All respondent groups report increased levels of concern or awareness about the risks of malpractice liability over their career and nearly one-third (29%) of physicians state that they have been interested in a certain specialty but shied away from it due to fear of higher legal exposure. These findings seem to suggest that the broad impact of the fear of litigation is significant and growing. [See Tables 1 - 4]

Some of the more arresting study findings are on the impact of liability concerns on the provision of medical care. Broadly, nearly all physicians and hospital administrators feel that unnecessary or excessive care is very often or sometimes provided because of fear about litigation. More specifically, physicians report that the fear of malpractice claims causes themselves and/or other physicians to:

- Order more tests than they would based only on professional judgment of what is medically needed. (91% have noticed other physicians, and 79% report they themselves do this due to concerns about malpractice liability)
- Refer patients to specialists more often than they would based only on their professional judgment of what is medically needed. (85% have noticed other physicians, and 74% report they themselves do this due to concerns about malpractice liability)

- Suggest invasive procedures such as biopsies to confirm diagnoses more often than they would based only on their professional judgment of what is medically needed. (73% have noticed other physicians, and 51% report they themselves do this due to concerns about malpractice liability)
- Prescribe more medications such as antibiotics than they would based only on their professional judgment of what is medically needed. (73% have noticed other physicians, and 41% report they themselves do this due to concerns about malpractice liability)

A similar, although slightly less dramatic trend is seen when looking at patient end of life issues.

- Just under two-thirds (61%) of physicians have noticed physicians being reluctant to make what they believe to be humane choices because of concerns that a family member might bring suit.
- Half (50%) have noticed a physician resorting to aggressive treatments of terminally ill patients because of liability concerns.
- Just under half (42%) have noticed a physician or staff member going against a patient's expressed wishes concerning life-prolonging medical interventions because of concerns that a family member might bring suit.

Not surprisingly, there is nearly unanimous agreement among physicians, nurses and hospital administrators that these extra tests, referrals and procedures contribute in a significant way to health care costs issues. [See Tables 6-10]

Views on the conducive nature of the hospital environment are mixed when it comes to issues of medical errors and liability protocol. Strong majorities of hospital administrators and nurses feel that staff in their hospital are encouraged to report medical errors such as dispensing incorrect medication or medication doses, surgical mistakes and human error in interpreting results of diagnostic tests. Only two thirds (63%) of physicians, however, agree perhaps due to a greater sense of personal exposure. [See Tables 11-13]

- Hospital administrators feel that while established rules and protocol have clearly improved or enhanced patient safety, they also believe that unnecessary rules of protocol are often created out of a concern about liability protection.
- Nearly half (43%) of all nurses also feel prohibited or discouraged from doing what they think is right for the patient because of rules or protocols set up for liability protection.

Draft: April 23, 2002

April __, 2002

MEMORANDUM FOR ALL PERSONNEL IN [list WHO/EOP units]

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES
 COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: ENRON SURVEY

The Chairman of the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs, Joseph Lieberman, has sent the White House a letter requesting certain information relating to Enron Corporation. The White House is cooperating with the Committee, and to the extent possible we will provide appropriate and responsive information.

Accordingly, we ask that you complete the attached survey and return it to my office (West Wing, Second Floor) no later than May 17, 2002.

You are expected to answer the survey to best of your knowledge and recollection. If it would help you to review any notes, documents, or e-mail you have, you should do so.

The survey question can be answered with a yes or a no, and we are not asking for further explanation at this time. Instead, depending on your answer, the Counsel's Office may contact you to obtain additional information.

The Committee has not requested copies of completed surveys, and therefore we do not intend to provide them to the Committee. Please be aware, however, that it is possible the Committee will seek completed surveys at a later date.

Please also be aware that the Counsel's Office represents the President and the White House and thus cannot act as your personal attorney in this matter.

If you have any questions, please call me (6-1918), Tim Flanigan (6-6627), Brett Kavanaugh (6-7984), Brad Berenson (6-2318), or Chris Bartolomucci (6-7963).

I suspect this would raise constitutional problems under Printz v. United States and New York v. United States, which prohibit the federal government from "commandeering" state officials to carry out federal programs.

Subject: federalization of state law enforcement officials?

Has anyone looked at the type of question posed by Bob (below)? I doubt

REV_00144125

it's something anyone would want to pursue as a policy matter, but I'd like to be able to answer his legal question.
The context is that DOE needs to ship plutonium from Colorado to a federal facility in South Carolina, and the South Carolina Governor has threatened to use state troopers to block the shipments at the state border. (He has even been staging blockade "exercises" with the state police.)

Rachel, does the President have authority to federalize SC law enforcement officials, or other public safety officials the Governor might use to obstruct shipments? Would it be legally possible for the President to direct, say, the Attorney General to assume control of SC officials for the express purpose of and for no longer than the time needed to ensure the safe and successful transport of plutonium?

Subject: IMPORTANT: Your certification needed on attached
Department of Justice form

According to our records, we have not received a signed certification from you on the form that is attached to this e-mail. The form relates to the Department of Justice's criminal investigation of the unauthorized disclosure last year of confidential government information concerning the blocking and freezing of the assets of the Global Relief Foundation, the Benevolence International Foundation, and the Holy Land Foundation. Please complete and sign the attached form and return it to Brent Greenfield in Room 160 1/2 no later than close of business Wednesday, April 24. If you have any questions or cannot complete the form in that time frame, please contact me at 6-7984.

As part of the certification, you are also asked to produce all official documents in your possession (including any e-mails and internal memoranda you have retained) that:

a) were created (or are dated) between September 11, 2001 and on or before September 30, 2001, and indicate that the Global Relief Foundation and/or the Benevolence International Foundation was being considered for inclusion on a list of organizations whose assets would be frozen by the United States government; or

b) were created (or are dated) on or before December 4, 2001, and indicate that the Holy Land Foundation was being considered for inclusion on a list of suspected terrorist fund-raising organizations or would otherwise have its assets blocked or frozen by the United States government; or

c) were created (or are dated) on or before December 14, 2001, and indicate that the Global Relief Foundation was to be searched or would have its assets frozen or blocked on or about December 14, 2001 or which

CERTIFICATION

I certify, to the best of my knowledge, that

_____ I had access

_____ I did not have access

- a) on or before September 30, 2001, to the information that the Global Relief Foundation and/or the Benevolence International Foundation was being considered for inclusion on a list of organizations whose assets would be frozen; or
- b) on or before December 3, 2001, to the information that a search would be conducted of (or that a blocking action would be taken against) the Holy Land Foundation on December 4, 2001; or
- c) on or before December 13, 2001, to the information that a blocking action would be taken against (or that a search would be conducted of) the Global Relief Foundation on December 14, 2001.

I further certify, to the best of my knowledge, that

_____ I have produced to the Office of the Counsel to the President all official documents in my possession (including any e-mails and internal memoranda I have) responsive to the document production directive in the e-mail memorandum to which this Certification was attached.

_____ I have conducted a search and determined that I have no such documents.

I understand that the information and documents I provide to the Office of the Counsel to the President are likely to be disclosed to the U.S. Department of Justice for use in its criminal investigation and that the Counsel's Office is not acting as my private attorney in this matter.

I further understand that this Certification is for purposes of a federal criminal investigation and that intentional false statements may result in criminal penalties or other sanctions.

Rachel, does the President have authority to federalize SC law enforcement officials, or other public safety officials the Governor might use to obstruct shipments? Would it be legally possible for the President to direct, say, the Attorney General to assume control of SC officials for the express purpose of and for no longer than the time needed to ensure the safe and successful transport of plutonium?

The DOJ folks have culled the best blurbs from support letters and have posted them at: <http://www.usdoj.gov/olp/gibbonssupport.htm>

I can get copies of the actual letters if you need them. Let me know.

Kim,
Jim Towe needs to have two speeches video taped today at 10:45am. We had it all set up at HHS - now Sec. Thompson needs the studio. Now we are all set for the RNC, but I need to make sure it is all legal to pay them the $75 that it would cost. I need to move this quickly. So sorry for this last minute request. Please advise.

Subject: IMPORTANT: Your certification needed on attached
Department of Justice form

According to our records, we have not received a signed certification from you on the form that is attached to this e-mail. The form relates to the Department of Justice's criminal investigation of the unauthorized disclosure last year of confidential government information concerning the blocking and freezing of the assets of the Global Relief Foundation, the Benevolence International Foundation, and the Holy Land Foundation. Please complete and sign the attached form and return it to Brent Greenfield in Room 160 1/2 no later than close of business Wednesday, April 24. If you have any questions or cannot complete the form in that time frame, please contact me at 6-7984.

As part of the certification, you are also asked to produce all official documents in your possession (including any e-mails and internal memoranda you have retained) that:

a) were created (or are dated) between September 11, 2001 and on or before September 30, 2001, and indicate that the Global Relief Foundation and/or the Benevolence International Foundation was being considered for inclusion on a list of organizations whose assets would be frozen by the United States government; or

b) were created (or are dated) on or before December 4, 2001, and indicate that the Holy Land Foundation was being considered for inclusion on a list of suspected terrorist fund-raising organizations or would otherwise have its assets blocked or frozen by the United States government; or

c) were created (or are dated) on or before December 14, 2001, and indicate that the Global Relief Foundation was to be searched or would have its assets frozen or blocked on or about December 14, 2001 or which

REV_00144169

CERTIFICATION

I certify, to the best of my knowledge, that

_____ I had access

_____ I did not have access

- a) on or before September 30, 2001, to the information that the Global Relief Foundation and/or the Benevolence International Foundation was being considered for inclusion on a list of organizations whose assets would be frozen; or
- b) on or before December 3, 2001, to the information that a search would be conducted of (or that a blocking action would be taken against) the Holy Land Foundation on December 4, 2001; or
- c) on or before December 13, 2001, to the information that a blocking action would be taken against (or that a search would be conducted of) the Global Relief Foundation on December 14, 2001.

I further certify, to the best of my knowledge, that

_____ I have produced to the Office of the Counsel to the President all official documents in my possession (including any e-mails and internal memoranda I have) responsive to the document production directive in the e-mail memorandum to which this Certification was attached.

_____ I have conducted a search and determined that I have no such documents.

I understand that the information and documents I provide to the Office of the Counsel to the President are likely to be disclosed to the U.S. Department of Justice for use in its criminal investigation and that the Counsel's Office is not acting as my private attorney in this matter.

I further understand that this Certification is for purposes of a federal criminal investigation and that intentional false statements may result in criminal penalties or other sanctions.

Reviews Of Terrorism Reinsurance Legislation Underway

With some holes opening up in the Senate schedule over the next several days,

Senate Democratic leaders could seek to begin debate on a terrorism insurance measure as early as Thursday, sources said today. Although he did not confirm that timeline, Senate Majority Leader Daschle this week said he expected the terrorism insurance bill could be "double tracked" with other legislation.

Democratic leaders

"hotlined" the legislation late Tuesday for concerns, and a spokeswoman for Senate

Banking ranking member Phil Gramm, R-Texas, said his aides were planning to review the text today. Sources said the offer would allow each side to offer two amendments to a reinsurance compromise crafted in December by Daschle, Gramm,

Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., and Banking Chairman Sarbanes.

The base measure is essentially silent on tort reform, except to say that taxpayers should not be liable for claims brought against the government. Aides to some other key GOP senators said they had not yet seen the offer, but did not think

two amendments
per side will be sufficient. In a letter to Daschle and Minority Leader Lott, 87 leading executives today warned that the nation's property owners and lenders have become increasingly exposed to catastrophic loss in the event of the next terrorist attack. "We urge you to pass a temporary federal backstop for terrorism insurance as quickly as possible," they wrote. * by Pamela Barnett

Matthew -

The 6.3% assessment represented what at the time was thought to be a full cost recovery for SSA in processing atty fee requests; however, that figure in fact provided significantly less than a full recovery of costs for SSA. For 2/3 of the atty fee payments SSA makes, the fee assessment will be capped at $100. For the remaining 1/3 atty fee awards, the fee assessment will be less than $100 (will be 6.3% of the atty fee award).

Please let me know whether you have any additional questions or will sign-off on this provision? Thanks.

Given the limited timing, OMB GC cannot assess all of these provisions before today's 4:45 deadline, but I will provide comments on Section 301, which would cap the assessment for SSA processing attorney fees at $100 or 6.3%, whichever is lower. We would be interested in finding out how the $100 / 6.3% figure was reached and whether the previous provision of 6.3% captured fees highly in excess of $100.

Mr. SHAW (for himself, Mr. MATSUI, Mr. BECERRA, Mr. BRADY of Texas, Mr. HAYW ORTH, Mr. HERGER, Mr. LEWIS of Kentucky, Mr. POMEROY, and Mr. RYAN of Wisconsin) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Ways an d Means

A BILL

To amend the Social Security Act and the Internal Revenue Code of 19 86 to provide additional safeguards for Social Security and Supplemental Securi ty Income beneficiaries with representative payees, to enhance program protecti ons, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Un ited States of America in Congress assembled,

SEC. 1. SHORT TITLE AND TABLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE- This Act may be cited as the `Social Security Program Protection Act of 2002'.

(b) TABLE OF CONTENTS- The table of contents is as follows:

Sec. 1. Short title and table of contents.

TITLE I--PROTECTION OF BENEFICIARIES

Subtitle A--Representative Payees

Sec. 101. Authority to reissue benefits misused by organizational re presentative payees.

Sec. 102. Oversight of representative payees.

Sec. 103. Disqualification from service as representative payee upon conviction of offenses resulting in imprisonment for more than 1 year and upon fugitive felon status.

Sec. 104. Fee forfeiture in case of benefit misuse by representative payees.

`(E) such person is in fugitive felon status as described in section 1611(e)(4).'

(c) TITLE XVI AMENDMENTS- Section 1631(a)(2)(B) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1383(a)(2)(B)) is amended--

(1) in clause (ii)--

(A) by striking `and' at the end of subclause (III);

(B) by redesignating subclause (IV) as subclause (VI); and

(C) by inserting after subclause (III) the following new subclauses:

`(IV) obtain information concerning whether the person has been convicted of any other offense under Federal or State law which resulted in imprisonment for more than 1 year;

`(V) obtain information concerning whether such person is a fugitive felon as described in section 1611(e)(4); and';

(2) in clause (iii)(II)--

(A) by striking `clause (ii)(IV)' and inserting `clause (ii)(V I)'; and

(B) by striking `section 205(j)(2)(B)(i)(IV)' and inserting `section 205(j)(2)(B)(i)(VI)'; and

(3) in clause (iii)--

(A) by striking `or' at the end of subclause (II);

(B) by striking the period at the end of subclause (III) and inserting a semicolon; and

(C) by adding at the end the following new subclauses:

`(IV) if the person has previously been convicted as described in clause (ii)(IV) of this subparagraph, unless the Commissioner determines that the payment would be appropriate notwithstanding the conviction; or

`(V) such person is in fugitive felon status as described in section 1611(e)(4).'

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE- The amendments made by this section shall take effect on the first day of the thirteenth month beginning after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 104. FEE FORFEITURE IN CASE OF BENEFIT MISUSE BY REPRESENTATIVE PAY EES.

(a) TITLE II AMENDMENTS- Section 205(j)(4)(A)(i) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 405(j)(4)(A)(i)) is amended--

(1) in the first sentence, by striking `A' and inserting `Except as provided in the next sentence, a'; and

(2) in the second sentence, by striking 'The Secretary' and inserting the following:

'A qualified organization may not collect a fee from an individual for any month with respect to which the Commissioner of Social Security or a court of competent jurisdiction has determined that the organization misused all or part of the individual's benefit, and any amount so collected by the qualified organization for such month shall be treated as a misused part of the individual's benefit for purposes of paragraphs (5) and (6). The Commissioner'.

(b) TITLE XVI AMENDMENTS- Section 1631(a)(2)(D)(i) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1383(a)(2)(D)(i)) is amended--

(1) in the first sentence, by striking 'A' and inserting 'Except as provided in the next sentence, a'; and

(2) in the second sentence, by striking 'The Commissioner' and inserting the following: 'A qualified organization may not collect a fee from an individual for any month with respect to which the Commissioner of Social Security or a court of competent jurisdiction has determined that the organization misused all or part of the individual's benefit, and any amount so collected by the qualified organization for such month shall be treated as a misused part of the individual's benefit for purposes of subparagraphs (E) and (F). The Commissioner'.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE- The amendments made by this section shall apply to any month involving benefit misuse by a representative payee in any case with respect to which the Commissioner makes the determination of misuse after December 31, 2002.

SEC. 105. LIABILITY OF REPRESENTATIVE PAYEES FOR MISUSED BENEFITS.

(a) TITLE II AMENDMENTS- Section 205(j) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 405(j)) (as amended by sections 101 and 102 of this Act) is amended further--

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (7), (8), and (9) as paragraphs (8), (9), and (10), respectively;

(2) in paragraphs (2)(C)(v), (3)(F), and (4)(B), by striking 'paragraph (9)' and inserting 'paragraph (10)';

(3) in paragraph (6)(A)(ii), by striking 'paragraph (9)' and inserting 'paragraph (10)'; and

(4) by inserting after paragraph (6) the following new paragraph:< /ul>

'(7)(A) If the Commissioner of Social Security or a court of competent jurisdiction determines that a representative payee that is not a Federal, State, or local government agency has misused all or part of an individual's benefit that was paid to such representative payee under this subsection, the representative payee shall be liable for the amount misused, and such amount (to the extent not repaid by the representative payee) shall be treated as an overpayment of benefits under this title to the representative payee for all purposes of this Act and related laws pertaining to the recovery of such overpayments. Subject to subparagraph (B), upon recovering all or any part of such amount, the Commissioner shall certify an amount equal to the recovered amount for payment to such individual or such individual's alternative representative payee.

`(B) The total of the amount certified for payment to such individual or such individual's alternative representative payee under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph and the amount certified for payment under paragraph (5) may not exceed the total benefit amount misused by the representative payee with respect to such individual.'.

(b) TITLE VIII AMENDMENT- Section 807 of such Act (as amended by section 102(b)(2)) is amended further by adding at the end the following new subsection:

`(I) LIABILITY FOR MISUSED AMOUNTS-

`(1) IN GENERAL- If the Commissioner of Social Security or a court of competent jurisdiction determines that a representative payee that is not a Federal, State, or local government agency has misused all or part of an individual's benefit that was paid to such representative payee under this section, the representative payee shall be liable for the amount misused, and such amount (to the extent not repaid by the representative payee) shall be treated as an overpayment of benefits under this title to the representative payee for all purposes of this Act and related laws pertaining to the recovery of such overpayments. Subject to paragraph (2), upon recovering all or any part of such amount, the Commissioner shall make payment of an amount equal to the recovered amount to such individual or such individual's alternative representative payee.

`(2) LIMITATION- The total of the amount paid to such individual or such individual's alternative representative payee under paragraph (1) of this subsection and the amount paid under subsection (i) may not exceed the total benefit amount misused by the representative payee with respect to such individual.'.

(c) TITLE XVI AMENDMENTS- Section 1631(a)(2) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1383(a)(2)) (as amended by section 102 of this Act) is amended further--

(1) in subparagraph (G)(i)(II), by striking 'paragraph (9)' and inserting 'paragraph (10)'; and

(2) by striking subparagraph (H) and inserting the following:

`(H)(i) If the Commissioner of Social Security or a court of competent jurisdiction determines that a representative payee that is not a Federal, State, or local government agency has misused all or part of an individual's benefit that was paid to the representative payee under this paragraph, the representative payee shall be liable for the amount misused, and the amount (to the extent not repaid by the representative payee) shall be treated as an overpayment of benefits under this title to the representative payee for all purposes of this Act and related laws pertaining to the recovery of the overpayments. Subject to clause (ii), upon recovering all or any part of the amount, the Commissioner shall make payment of an amount equal to the recovered amount to such individual or such individual's alternative representative payee.

`(ii) The total of the amount paid to such individual or such individual's alternative representative payee under clause (i) of this subparagraph and the amount paid under subparagraph (E) may not exceed the total benefit amount misused by the representative payee with respect to such individual.'.

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE- The amendments made by this section shall apply to benefit misuse by a representative payee in any case with respect to which the Commissioner makes the determination of misuse after December 31, 2002.

SEC. 106. AUTHORITY TO REDIRECT DELIVERY OF BENEFIT PAYMENTS WHEN A REPRESENTATIVE PAYEE FAILS TO PROVIDE REQUIRED ACCOUNTING.

(a) TITLE II AMENDMENTS- Section 205(j)(3) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 405(j)(3)) is amended--

(1) by redesignating subparagraphs (E) and (F) as subparagraphs (F) and (G), respectively; and

(2) by inserting after subparagraph (D) the following new subparagraph:

“(E) In any case in which the person described in subparagraph (A) or (D) receiving payments on behalf of another fails to submit a report required by the Commissioner of Social Security under subparagraph (A) or (D), the Commissioner may, after furnishing notice to such person and the individual entitled to such payment, require that such person appear in person at a field office of the Social Security Administration serving the area in which the individual resides in order to receive such payments.”.

(b) TITLE VIII AMENDMENTS- Section 807(h) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1007(h)) is amended--

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (3) and (4) as paragraphs (4) and (5), respectively; and

(2) by inserting after paragraph (2) the following new paragraph:

`(iii) by substituting, in subsection (a)(2)(C)(i), the phrase 'under title II' for the phrase 'under title XVI';

`(iv) by substituting, in subsection (b)(1)(A), the phrase
'pay the amount of such fee' for the phrase 'certify the amount of such fee for payment' and by striking, in subsection (b)(1)(A), the phrase 'or certified for payment'; and `(v) by substituting, in subsection (b)(1)(B)(ii), the phrase 'determined to be such amounts as determined before any applicable reduction under section 1631(g), and reduced by the amount of any reduction in benefits under this title or title II made pursuant to section 1127 (a)' for the phrase 'determined before any applicable reduction under section 1127(a)'; and

(4) by striking subparagraph (B) and inserting the following new subparagraphs:

`(B) Subject to subparagraph (C), if the claimant is determined to be entitled to past-due benefits under this title and the person representing the claimant is an attorney, the Commissioner of Social Security shall pay out of such pastdue benefits (as determined before any applicable reduction under section 1631(g), and reduced by the amount of any reduction in benefits under this title or title II made pursuant to section 1127(a)) to such attorney an amount equal to so much of the maximum fee as does not exceed 25 percent of such past-due benefits (as so determined and so reduced).

`(C)(i) Whenever a fee for services is required to be paid to an attorney from a claimant's past-due benefits pursuant to subparagraph (B), the Commissioner shall impose on the attorney an assessment calculated in accordance with clause (ii).

`(ii)(I) The amount of an assessment under clause (i) shall be equal to the product obtained by multiplying the amount of the representative's fee that would be required to be paid by subparagraph (B) before the application of this subparagraph, by the percentage specified in subclause (II), except that the maximum amount of the assessment may not exceed $100.

`(II) The percentage specified in this subclause is such percentage rate as the Commissioner determines is necessary in order to achieve full recovery of the costs of determining and approving fees to attorneys from the past-due benefits of claimants, but not in excess of 6.3 percent.

`(iii) The Commissioner may collect the assessment imposed on an attorney under clause (i) by offset from the amount of the fee otherwise required by subparagraph (B) to be paid to the attorney from a claimant's past-due benefits.

`(iv) An attorney subject to an assessment under clause (i) may not, directly or indirectly, request or otherwise obtain reimbursement for such assessment from the claimant whose claim gave rise to the assessment.

`(v) Assessments on attorneys collected under this subparagraph shall be deposited in the Treasury in a separate fund created for this purpose.

`(vi) The assessments authorized under this subparagraph shall be collected and available for obligation only to the extent and in the amount provided in advance in appropriations Acts. Amounts so appropriated are authorized to remain available until expended, for administrative expenses in carrying out this title and related laws.'

SEC. 416. OPTIONAL METHODS FOR COMPUTING NET EARNINGS FROM SELF-EMPLOYMENT.

(a) AMENDMENTS TO THE INTERNAL REVENUE CODE OF 1986-

(1) IN GENERAL- Section 1402(h) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended to read as follows:

`(h) OPTIONAL METHOD FOR COMPUTING NET EARNINGS FROM SELF-EMPLOYMENT-< /ul>

`(1) INDIVIDUALS- In the case of any trade or business which is carried on by an individual--

`(A) if the gross income derived by the individual from such trade or business is not more than the upper limit for the taxable year and the net earnings from self-employment derived by the individual from such trade or business (computed under subsection (a) without regard to this sentence) are less than $66\frac{2}{3}$ percent of such gross income, the net earnings from self-employment derived by the individual from such trade or business may, at the individual's option, be deemed to be $66\frac{2}{3}$ percent of such gross income, or

`(B) if the gross income derived by the individual from such trade or business is more than the upper limit for the taxable year and the net earnings from self-employment derived by the individual from such trade or business (computed under subsection (a) without regard to this sentence) are less than the lower limit for the taxable year, the net earnings from self-employment derived by the individual from such trade or business may, at the individual's option, be deemed to be the lower limit for the taxable year.

`(2) MEMBER OF A PARTNERSHIP- In the case of a member of a partnership carrying on any trade or business--

`(A) if the member's distributive share of the gross income of the partnership derived from such trade or business (after such gross income has been reduced by the sum of all payments to which section 707(c) applies) is not more than the upper limit for the taxable year and the member's distributive share (whether or not distributed) of income described in section 702(a)(8) derived from such trade or business (computed under this subsection without regard to this sentence) is less than 66 2/3 percent of the member's distributive share of such gross income (after such gross income has been so reduced), the member's distributive share of income described in section 702(a)(8) derived from such trade or business may, at the member's option, be deemed to be an amount equal to 66 2/3 percent of the member's distributive share of such gross income (after such gross income has been so reduced), or

(B) if the member's distributive share of the gross income of the partnership derived from such trade or business (after such gross income has been reduced by the sum of all payments to which section 707(c) applies) is more than the upper limit for the taxable year and the member's distributive share (whether or not distributed) of income described in section 702(a)(8) derived from such trade or business (computed under this subsection without regard to this sentence) is less than the lower limit for the taxable year, the member's distributive share of income described in section 702(a)(8) derived from such trade or business may, at the member's option, be deemed to be the lower limit for the taxable year.

“(3) UPPER AND LOWER LIMITS- For purposes of this subsection--

“(A) LOWER LIMIT- The lower limit for any taxable year is the sum of the amounts required under section 213(d) of the Social Security Act for a quarter of coverage in effect with respect to each calendar quarter ending with or within such taxable year.

“(B) UPPER LIMIT- The upper limit for any taxable year is the amount equal to 150 percent of the lower limit for such taxable year.

`(4) DETERMINATION OF GROSS INCOME- For purposes of this subsection, the term 'gross income' means--

`(A) in the case of any trade or business in which the income is computed under a cash receipts and disbursements method, the gross receipts from such trade or business reduced by the cost or other basis of property which was purchased and sold in carrying on such trade or business, adjusted (after such reduction) in accordance with the provisions of paragraphs (1) through (7) and paragraph (9) of subsection (a), and

`(B) in the case of any trade or business in which the income is computed under an accrual method, the gross income from such trade or business, adjusted in accordance with the provisions of paragraphs (1) through (7) and paragraph (9) of subsection (a).

`(5) INCOME DERIVED FROM MORE THAN ONE TRADE OR BUSINESS- For purposes of this subsection, if an individual (including a member of a partnership) derives gross income from more than one such trade or business, such gross income (including his distributive share of the gross income of any partnership derived from any such trade or business) shall be deemed to have been derived from one trade or business.

`(6) ELECTION- The option under this subsection shall be allowed for any taxable year only if elected on the first return filed for such taxable year'.

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENT- Section 1402(a) of such Code is amended by striking all that follows the first sentence following paragraph (15) and inserting `For optional method of determining net earnings from self-employment, see subsection (h)'.`.

(b) AMENDMENTS TO THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT-

(1) IN GENERAL- Section 211(g) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 411(g)) is amended to read as follows:

`Optional Method for Computing Net Earnings From Self-Employment

`(g)(1) In the case of any trade or business which is carried on by an individual--

`(A) if the gross income derived by the individual from such trade or business is not more than the upper limit for the taxable year and the net earnings from self-employment derived by the individual from such trade or business (computed under subsection (a) without regard to this sentence) are less than $66\frac{2}{3}$ percent of such gross income, the net earnings from self-employment derived by the individual from such trade or business may, at the individual's option, be deemed to be $66\frac{2}{3}$ percent of such gross income, or

`(B) if the gross income derived by the individual from such trade or business is more than the upper limit for the taxable year and the net earnings from self-employment derived by the individual from such trade or business (computed under subsection (a) without regard to this sentence) are less than the lower limit for the taxable year, the net earnings from self-employment derived by the individual from such trade or business may, at the individual's option, be deemed to be the lower limit for the taxable year.

`(2) In the case of a member of a partnership carrying on any trade or business--

(2) MISUSE OF BENEFITS DEFINED- Section 205(j) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 405(j)) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

“(8) For purposes of this subsection, misuse of benefits by a representative payee occurs in any case in which the representative payee receives payment under this title for the use and benefit of another person and converts such payment, or any part thereof, to a use other than for the use and benefit of such other person. The Commissioner of Social Security may prescribe by regulation the meaning of the term ‘use and benefit’ for purposes of this paragraph.”.

(b) TITLE VIII AMENDMENTS-

(1) REISSUANCE OF BENEFITS- Section 807(i) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1007(i)) is amended by inserting after the first sentence the following new sentences: “In any case in which a representative payee--

“(A) that is not an individual; or

“(B) is an individual who, for any month during a period when misuse occurs, serves 15 or more individuals who are beneficiaries under this title, title II, title XVI, or any combination of such titles;

misuses all or part of an individual's benefit paid to such representative payee, the Commissioner of Social Security shall pay to the beneficiary or the beneficiary's alternative representative payee an amount equal to the amount of such benefit so misused. The provisions of this paragraph are subject to the limitations of subsection (l)(2).”.

(2) MISUSE OF BENEFITS DEFINED- Section 807 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1007) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

“(j) MISUSE OF BENEFITS- For purposes of this title, misuse of benefits by a representative payee occurs in any case in which the representative payee receives payment under this title for the use and benefit of another person and converts such payment, or any part thereof, to a use other than for the use and benefit of such other person. The Commissioner of Social Security may prescribe by regulation the meaning of the term ‘use and benefit’ for purposes of this subsection.”.

(3) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT- Section 807(a) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1007(a)) is amended, in the first sentence, by inserting ‘use and’ before ‘benefit’.

(c) TITLE XVI AMENDMENTS-

(1) REISSUANCE OF BENEFITS- Section 1631(a)(2)(E) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1383(a)(2)(E)) is amended by inserting after the first sentence the following new sentences: “In any case in which a representative payee--

“(i) that is not an individual (regardless of whether it is a ‘qualified organization’ within the meaning of subparagraph (D)(ii)); or

“(ii) is an individual who, for any month during a period when misuse occurs, serves 15 or more individuals who are beneficiaries under this title, title II, title VIII, or any combination of such titles;

misuses all or part of an individual's benefit paid to the representative payee, the Commissioner of Social Security shall make payment to the beneficiary or the beneficiary's alternative representative payee of an amount equal to the amount of the benefit so misused. The provisions of this subparagraph are subject to the limitations of subparagraph (H)(ii).”.

(2) EXCLUSION OF REISSUED BENEFITS FROM RESOURCES- Section 1613(a) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1382b(a)) is amended--

(A) in paragraph (12), by striking ‘and’ at the end;

(B) in paragraph (13), by striking the period and inserting ‘; and’; and

We'll soon reach the point in our redesign of the WAVES interface where we'll need to know if we have to accommodate record management or not. Hate to do the extra work to add it if it's not required; but also hate to go back and add it later. Our non-legal position is that it (WAVES requests) got record managed in the first place because we used the email system to transport the request and not because someone thought WAVE requests needed to be record managed.... help!

Hate to do the extra work to add it if it's not required; but also hate to go back and add it later. Our non-legal position is that it (WAVES requests) got record managed in the first place because we used the email system to transport the request and not because someone thought WAVE requests needed to be record managed.... help!

Ron came to see me yesterday about this. I'm still trying to figure out why he told me this, but he's going to make the case to the judge that he needs a source inside the counsel's office, someone he can go to without going through the press office because on big stories (and he mentioned Supreme Court) he needs to get information quickly and he often needs to be able to tell his editors that he has talked to someone other than the press office. again, not sure why he told me this.

We are having a shower for Courtney and Noel to celebrate the newest additions to the Counsel office family.

When: Tuesday, April 30

Time: 8:45 am (right after staff meeting)

Place: WW, 2 Floor

Please bring your favorite breakfast dish to share (except Brett- this is a no Pop Tart event). Let me know what you are bringing so we don't double up on too many things. We are asking Katie and Becky to make their famous potato(e) and egg casseroles, and Ed, Krispy Kreme has your name written all over it.

Hope you guys can make it!

Reviews Of Terrorism Reinsurance Legislation Underway

With some holes opening up in the Senate schedule over the next several days,

Senate Democratic leaders could seek to begin debate on a terrorism insurance measure as early as Thursday, sources said today. Although he did not confirm that timeline, Senate Majority Leader Daschle this week said he expected the terrorism insurance bill could be "double tracked" with other legislation.

Democratic leaders

"hotlined" the legislation late Tuesday for concerns, and a spokeswoman for Senate

Banking ranking member Phil Gramm, R-Texas, said his aides were planning to review the text today. Sources said the offer would allow each side to offer two amendments to a reinsurance compromise crafted in December by Daschle, Gramm,

Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., and Banking Chairman Sarbanes.

The base measure is essentially silent on tort reform, except to say

REV_00144330

that taxpayers should not be liable for claims brought against the government. Aides to some other key GOP senators said they had not yet seen the offer, but did not think
two amendments
per side will be sufficient. In a letter to Daschle and Minority Leader
Lott, 87 leading executives today warned that the nation's property owners and lenders have become increasingly exposed to catastrophic loss in the event of the next terrorist attack. "We urge you to pass a temporary federal backstop for terrorism insurance as quickly as possible," they wrote. * by Pamela Barnett

I was in the room, as was Joel Kaplan. Mitch never said anything like that about putting a value on human life. That account is wrong.

The discussions that night largely were between (i) Delay and Nickles and (ii) Daschle and Gephardt.

Subject: victims comp discussions

The National Journal is doing a story about how the federal government allocates scarce resources and how resources were allocated post-9-11. She is looking into the victims comp fund negotiations.

Sources she has talked to have told her that Senator Daschle said you can't put a value on a human life and Mitch said- yes I can and it is $37,850 She has also heard that Mitch was advocating for the collateral offset provision, and that there was a discussion about making this an appropriation as opposed to an entitlement.

She would like to know if this is a true accounting of these negotiations/discussions. She would also like to talk with Mitch or any staff involved in these discussions to get a more well-rounded version of events. Her deadline, of course, is today.

House Veterans Affairs Committee Subcommittee on Health
Hearing on H.R. 3253 and H.R. 3254
April 10, 2002

Follow-up Questions for
The Honorable Leo S. Mackay, Jr., Ph.D.
Deputy Secretary of Veterans Affairs

Question 1: Your testimony indicates you are concerned that, without dedicated funding, the new programs our two bills would establish could diminish VA's ability to fulfill its primary mission. Are these truly VA's concerns, or OMB's concerns, or those of the Office of Homeland Security? Since both these bills include provisions that require outside funding, in effect forbidding the Secretary from proceeding unless outside funding is available, what is the purpose of your raising concerns about funding?

Response: The concerns about receiving dedicated funding represent the Department of Veterans Affairs' (VA) position. Although H.R. 3253 and H.R. 3254 did authorize funding to meet the objectives of the legislation, it is not clear that the necessary funds under Public Law 107-38 will, in fact, be available for these purposes. Without additional funding specifically dedicated to those activities, VA is concerned about carrying out the proposed activities of H.R. 3253 and H.R. 3254.

Question 2: Beyond the funding question, considering the events of the past year and the new world we have entered with regard to terrorism here on our very shores, should Congress charge the Department with new public health functions beyond its primary mission of providing health care and services to veterans? Please explain the rationale for your response.

Response: Because of the new reality of the threat to the American homeland, VA cannot help but operate differently. We must make prudent preparation to safeguard the life and health of our employees and veterans under our care. As well, VA as an integrated and pre-deployed health care asset can play a role beyond the purely self-defensive in public health preparedness and response if funded to do so. The issue, really, is one of opportunity cost. Can the Congress and OHS afford not to take advantage of this tremendous resource if the American people are to be adequately protected?

Under the Federal Response Plan, VA today functions as a reservoir of services, expertise and trained health-care workers when requested to provide excess capacity in a given location to support local capabilities. VA may be reimbursed for these services. This is the same ethic that we seek with regard to emergency planning/homeland defense: make available to the public defense the tremendous resource of VA's endowment of people, expertise, and geographic expanse, but recompense it for the services it provides in defense of the public.

Question 3: You estimated the first-year costs associated with H.R. 3254 to be $5.6 million, and ten-year costs to be $55 million. What is VA's basis for this estimate? Since VA is now spending billions of dollars annually on its academic affairs with schools of health professions nationwide, does your estimate indicate this bill would represent insignificant incremental costs, or is there some other implication the Subcommittee should note?

Response: A breakdown of the costs is attached. These are the additional costs to VA associated with the development and production by VHA's Employee Education System of appropriate training and education programs to meet its obligations under H.R. 3254. They have no relation to funds that VA spends in regard to its academic affiliations program.

Question 4: In your participation with the Office of Homeland Security to craft a comprehensive and coordinated federal policy on bio-terrorism, what is your estimate of the cost of the expertise, infrastructure and time that the Department is committing to the effort? Would it be fair to conclude that this work extends beyond your primary mission of caring for veterans? Please explain the rationale for your response.

Response: The President's formation of the Office of Homeland Security, with its Homeland Security Councils (HSC) and Policy Coordinating Committees (PCC) and working groups, created a new set of inter-agency activities and responsibilities for VA. VA's newly established Office of Operations, Security and Preparedness (OSP) has the mission to coordinate all of VA's involvement in HSCs and PCCs, and enhance liaison activities with other Federal agencies. In addition, OSP was formed with the specific intent of improving and increasing VA's ability to respond to any contingency (whether natural disaster or terrorist assault) with minimal disruption to ongoing services to veterans and their families. VA's focus is on all hazards that require comprehensive emergency management including bioterrorism. Therefore, we cannot separate out costs related exclusively to bioterrorism. The cost to establish OSP was approximately $7.9 million. An additional $115 million is needed in FY 2002 for other activities throughout VA to enhance internal preparedness capability.

Caring for veterans is the Department's primary mission, and VA is also tasked with conducting research to improve medical care that we provide, and with educating health care practitioners through affiliations with colleges, universities, etc. VA's participation in developing a comprehensive federal policy on bio-terrorism goes directly to the Department's ability to meet the needs of veterans who may be victims of bio-terrorist attacks, either in the United States or on foreign battlefields. This work directly supports VA's fourth mission of contingency support to DoD and natural disasters. VA is the largest integrated, pre-deployed Federal health care system in this nation that is strategically positioned to respond during an emergency. Disasters occur locally. VA's strategic local presence in most communities makes our role inevitable in times of natural disasters or terrorist attacks. We must be prepared to take care of our veterans as well as our employees. Additional resources and authorization would be required to extend our care to other affected citizens. When properly tasked and resourced, VA can supplement Homeland Security with minimal disruption to the Department's primary mission of caring for veterans and their families.

Question 5: The written testimony submitted by the Vietnam Veterans of America does not support H.R. 3253 due to the funding matter that was thoroughly reviewed during the hearing. Mindful of the views of VVA, and in your opinion, can your 4th mission – supporting military and national emergencies – be carried out without jeopardizing the current resources available to VHA?

Response: VA believes that the existing 4th mission can be performed, as it now exists, without jeopardizing the current resources available to VHA. VHA has worked closely with DOD to provide contingency back up for many years, and VA does not see this changing, although excess capacity in both systems may be lower today than it was 10 years ago. In national emergencies, VA has a secondary role to HHS and provides support in an emergency. HHS also has other partners in the National Disaster Medical System, including DOD and civilian facilities.

me too! We are going from good guys to bad guys on this. The private sector wants a bill, and they don't want to split hairs over punitives. As a starting point, I think the Dodd substitute is acceptable. Frankly, it's a lot more than we were willing to accept last year in the Senate version to get the bill moving. We can still offer two amendments, and then there has to be some process to resolve differences with the House bill which has more than we want on tort reforms.

GOP Senators Say Liability Issue Holding Up Terrorism Reinsurance
Senate Republican leaders on terrorism insurance legislation emerged late Wednesday from a closed-door meeting saying the stumbling block to a unanimous consent agreement remained punitive damages related to acts of terrorism. "The sticking point is still liability," said Senate Banking ranking member Phil Gramm, R-Texas, who participated in the meeting along with Senate Minority Leader Lott and Sen. Mitch McConnell, R-Ky. Although Senate Majority Leader Daschle has proposed that each side offer amendments on the liability issue, the two sides cannot reach an accord on the base bill, Republican and Democratic bill managers said Wednesday. Daschle has offered to use a bipartisan compromise reached among key players in December. It included only a modest tort reform component, stipulating that taxpayers would not be liable for acts of terrorism. Gramm said Wednesday that the Republicans' counteroffer is to use as the starting point a bill Gramm unveiled in November with Banking Chairman Sarbanes, Sens. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., Michael Enzi, R-Wyo., and the Treasury Department. That bill was never formally introduced because Daschle objected to its liability language. Among other things, it would have consolidated terrorism-related lawsuits in federal court. A unanimous consent offer Daschle circulated this week would enable each side to offer amendments related to liability. But in an interview Wednesday evening, Dodd said the GOP is standing firm in wanting the base bill to be more to their advantage. "When you have a majority ... you get to decide what the starting point is," Dodd said. Daschle is providing the minority with an opportunity to offer amendments on liability

REV_00144351

and is willing to accept the outcome of those votes, Dodd said. "What more is he supposed to do?" he asked.
